

Illustration

1000+ NUMBER OF ILLUSTRATIONS
800+ IN COLOR CANVAS

MASTERS OF AMERICAN ILLUSTRATION — 40 ILLUSTRATORS FROM THIS PUBLISHER

The new book by Fred Taylor — For more information visit www.TheIllustratedPress.com, or contact us at the address below.

 The Illustrated Press, Inc.

1000 Russell Boulevard • St. Louis, Missouri 63133 • 314/967-4000

41

Illustration

2010年MBA逻辑-1500套真题精解(第3版) = 完整版

From the Editor...

Please allow me to welcome you to this second "Special Issue" of Illustration. As in our first such issue, this longer format has been designed to give added recognition to a select group of artists who have made singular contributions to the field of commercial illustration. This time around, we are honoring the career of Boris Artzy, an artist whose style and vision—like that of E.C. Leyendecker, Norman Rockwell, and Al Parker before him—Stirredly turned the field upside-down. Legions of imitators were inspired from his innovations in flavor, but suffice it to say that Artzy's use of line, color sense, and painting technique placed him in a category all his own—as a true giant in the history of illustration. For all these reasons, it is a great pleasure to present you with this retrospective and celebration of his remarkable life's work.

As always, I must thank the many people who have provided invaluable support to this publication. David Ayalos undertook the tremendous job of assembling the manuscript, article printed in this issue, and I cannot thank him enough for the countless hours he devoted to the research of this project. Of course, my extensive graduate past and the late Boris Pacholski himself and his wife, Ida, who worked with David in providing the wealth of beautiful images reproduced on the pages ahead. Without their support and cooperation, this issue would not have been possible.

Finally I must give a special nod of appreciation to the many advertisers who have stepped forward to support this issue of Blastrine—those who have been there with us from the beginning, as well as some new faces who are lending a hand to help cover our expenses. It is my suggestion to you that without such support, this boutique publication would not be able to survive in the current fickle marketplace. Please support these advertisers in as many ways as you can, because without their generosity, this magazine—this dream—would not be able to survive. Thank you.

سازمان اسناد و کتابخانه ملی

Classmate.com, Inc.

Cover illustration by Bennie Fuchs

DANIEL ZIMMER
EDITION PUBLISHERS - GERMANY
www.danielzimmer.com

MATTHEW ZIMMER

卷之三

WANT A BETTER

第二部分

WILHELM FRIEDRICH

Библиотека
Библиотека

www.elsevier.com

100-100-000000 is the unique, random and permanent ID for identifying the customer in the system.

Приложение 2. Правила выдачи земельных участков из земель сельскохозяйственного назначения в сельской местности в целях личного подсобного хозяйства и дачного строительства

In addition, there are no provisions for any additional costs resulting from such changes.

机用夹具设计与制造

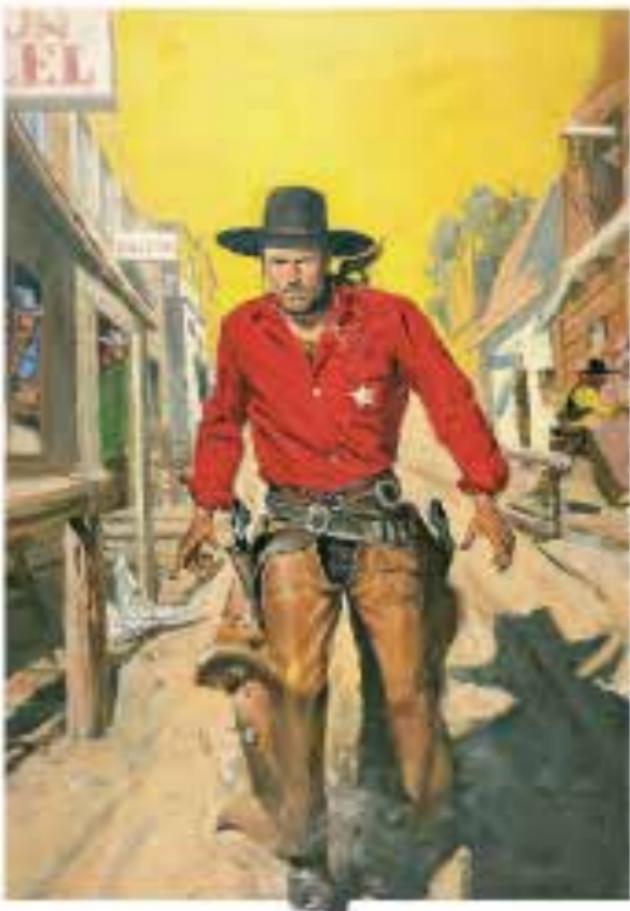

1984 RELEASE UNDER E.O. 14176

Fig. 2. Results of the 1990-1991 survey of the northern portion of the

Learn more about the new features in the latest version.

• 100% 電子報刊

INTERVIEW WITH THE TELEGRAPH

SIGNED ERNEST CHIRIACKA POSTERS ARE NOW AVAILABLE!

Each poster is signed by legendary artist Ernest Chirico, and is 10 x 12 inches, printed on high quality cardstock.
Each poster is $20.00. Please add $5.00 for U.S. postage, $18.00 International, for either one or both posters.

To order, send check or money order payable to:

Ernest Chirico, 2659 East Lake of the Isles, Minneapolis, Minnesota 55408.
Tel 612-877-3044 or www.chirico.com

The Art of Bernie Fuchs

by David Apatoff

The night that Bernie Fuchs ran his first cartoon in the Illustration Hall of Fame for his lifetime achievement, he was standing in his underwear about six feet from his house when the phone rang. It was Time magazine asking him to illustrate their cover. "Of course," the voice on the phone continued, "you don't qualify for our regular list because you're not at that."

Fuchs' achievement remained under wraps. If you count only the year Time Bernie Fuchs made it to the top of the Illustration Hall of Fame, that would be one day. But if you count the distance he traveled to get there, it was a long journey filled with challenges starting out as a small and aspiring artist in the depths of the Great Depression. Fuchs had no art training at all, and he attributes his becoming an artist to his mother's insistence that he paint a picture or else leaving what an illustrator did. After high school, he permanently missed his right hand. Using three fingers in an awkward scissor-like fashion of his ability to hold a pencil, this lifelong pain he tried to hide until the day he sold his first cartoon to a puppet factory he co-founded for his entrepreneurship of painting cartoon puppet hands.

The young man, Fuchs was one of the top illustrators in America. By the age of 30, he was named "Artist of the Year" by the Artists Guild of New York. He became the emerging preeminent ever listed in the Illustration Hall of Fame, and the most honored illustrator of his generation. In the words of Jack Reed, the foremost authority on illustration art, "his pictures are probably more adored—and more emulated—than those of any other current illustrator."

Bernie Fuchs, c. 2000

Then the early 1970s intervened. Fuchs became an illustrator during one of the most volatile eras in the history of illustration. Illustrators that had been the lifeblood of the illustrations field for nearly a century were going out of business. Alternatives were also emerging: print media, for television, and photography was becoming predominant over illustration. Fuchs found himself on the front lines of the epic battle between painting and photography, yet managed to win critical respect and awards at both a painter and a illustrator. Fuchs stand as the top of the fast changing illustration market for decades. Every year for more than 40 years, as galleries and museums and illustration competitions have a multitude of styles and trends, Fuchs' work was admired by different critics from the Society of Illustrators as among the best work of that year. His other illustrations in history are shown each arrested.

This is the story of a remarkable illustrator who overcame all odds to reach the top of his field, and the story of what he found when he got there.

BLOWING UP IN OTTAWA

Bennie Berney was born in 1911 in the small town of O'Tallor, Illinois, which began its existence as a water tank on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad about 20 miles south of St. Louis. The water tank and the town that grew up around it were both named for a local railroad executive. When and was discovered nearby in the 1850s, German settlers began to migrate to the area. By the 1910s the population of O'Tallor had grown to 1,500.

Bennie was born at home because O'Tallor had no hospital. His parents, Leo and Florence Kueh, had a troubled marriage, and Leo abandoned his family when Bennie was only five years old; soon after, Leo died. Florence and Bennie had two other sons, Betty, about six, and parents. By all accounts, Florence's parents were a stern, authoritarian couple who had always disapproved of Bennie's marriage to Leo. After raising seven children on a coal-miner's pay, they understandably wanted a quiet life and preferred having a nice family than one that lived in the small house because difficult.

Bennie was extremely quiet at a young age. "He never said a word to anyone," recalled Edith Johnson, who lived next door to Bennie. "He was quite ill then, I guess he must have been planning his escape from O'Tallor."

One day, there were people in O'Tallor who paid attention to Bennie and made him feel like Dorothy's younger brother, Dick, was still living at home and tormenting Dorothy. He introduced Bennie to the music of Captain Miller on the radio, and soon made Bennie Bennie's best friend. Another person who made a special interest in Bennie was Miss Edith, Dick's aunts. She was a local businesswoman who recognized Bennie's gifts and took a special interest in him. A kind and supportive man, Miss Edith stepped in to fill the gap left by Bennie's father, providing Bennie with encouragement and advice over the years.

By age six Bennie had made up his mind that he was going to become a musician or Gram Müller's band. A few years later, when Eddie died in a First World War plane crash, Bennie realized he no longer knew what he was going to do when he grew up.

In addition to music, Bennie enjoyed drawing and studied art under outside artists. His specialty was drawing Disney characters; the character he was particularly proficient at was Mickey and Donald Duck. But his goals, without any art training or adult encouragement, those men became famous during the 1930s, elementary schools during the Depression, and Bennie never had access to illustrations of famous heroes that inspired so many other illustrators in their youth. The first time Bennie saw a museum or an gallery of any kind was in the 1930s, when his older and lucid teacher, noticing that Bennie seemed to have a natural gift for drawing, took him to the Louvre on an exhibit of impressionism. The trip made a big impression on Bennie but, since remained his only interest.

Bennie began playing the trumpet at around age nine. He played it in a fast blues and played with great dedication so that by the time he reached his goals, he was already playing in the O'Tallor Township High School band. The band teacher was amazed and said he had nothing more to teach Bennie so he arranged for him to take lessons with a more advanced teacher in the neighboring town of Belleville, Illinois. It was very long before Bennie had discovered off that his music teacher had in fact used on several of another teacher who could challenge and inspire him. Ultimately he found just a teacher of his own in St. Louis, a jazz entrepreneur named Eddie Basser. Basser's high school classmate Eddie recalled that Basser was known famous around O'Tallor for his trumpet playing. He was a determined independent who adored and taught students at hand or mouth.

One day a professional piano player and singer named Justice Hubbard to which Bennie play at a high school event. Bob had been working in a neighboring music store he learned of Bennie's reputation. Impressed by Bennie's ability to play any song he had heard just once, as well as Bennie's gift for improvisation, Bob offered him a job on the spot. Bennie joined Bob's quartet and soon he was earning money by sight playing in clubs and at social events for the Elks and other lodges in the state.

Playing the trumpet also had its unique benefits. "Bennie and his trumpet. Sam were the two most sought after boys in high school," Edith recalled. "Bennie was considered a big catch because he played trumpet at night clubs out of town and even dated girls from Belleville."

What no one in O'Tallor knew, except the Bennie's closest friends was that Bennie's love of music had led him east for his teen years to a remote part of East St. Louis, where Bennie and Sam had discovered an all-black neighborhood called "Nell's Country Club." This was unthinkable in O'Tallor in

Bennie as a teenage stage manager student

O'FALLON CENTENNIAL

1855

1955

O'FALLON, ILLINOIS

Souvenir Program

Inside's first published year, 1955 O'Fallon Centennial, 1955 design courtesy of the O'Fallon Historical Society.

Black and white portrait of Bertie Barnes.

the 1910 census that time the town was still segregated. The town's director noted that the two most productive coal mines were named "Dagger Hollow Mine, No. 1 and 2." The town did not even permit Blacks to be in the town at night. To make matters worse, Barnes' great grandfather was an informal segregationist who forbade Barnes to associate with Blacks. Barnes had a broken relationship with his grandfather in 1917 when Jackie Robinson joined the Brooklyn Dodgers, becoming the first Black major league player. Barnes told his grandfather that the Dodgers were his favorite team, but his grandfather would not stand for it. He insisted that only a "Dagger Lover" would support the Dodgers. Barnes refused to back down, despite his mother's fears about his grandfather's reaction. From that moment until the day he died in a coal mine collapse, Barnes' grandfather remained distant from Barnes.

On October 15th, 1917, Barnes, living in his family's home that he had grown up spending the night at, took his mother to fact his and Saint step out to Vicks' Country Club. Barnes' house faced directly with the mountains there and they were struck by Barnes' view of the mountains, it reminded him of Taggart's location. Barnes stepped up on stage, and once he was performing here into the night with accomplished jazz and blues musicians. Much was a dropping point in the many accomplished traveling accommodations, including ones like Atlantic City Island. They would come by New York after performing at St. Louis and continue playing just for the love of the music. Barnes received a few other musical education by observing the jazz professionals in the field.

He also received another kind of education, reviewing the way life of Japanese and minorities at Duluth. One night, a member of the minnows business inquiry that a white boy from segregated O'Tallons had the authority to play here in Duluth. He confronted Barnes with a large knife. The knife flew and hit Barnes' chest and said, "I know that." The man retorted, then lowered his knife, saying "had I given it to you earlier, I would have been shot." After that, Taggart kept a protective eye on the Barnes. "Don't try O'Lones when I'm around," he said. "It's a love the music. You're our guest."

It turned out that Barnes had more to worry about at home than he did at O'Lones'. His had to keep his love of jazz a secret and would write long letters one of his musician friends from McCall, Idaho. Barnes' mother asked his mother about writing home a Black letter. She became upset and warned Barnes that he should never even think of doing such a thing because her grandfather might find them all out of the house. So Barnes kept his secret file to himself.

During Barnes' senior year in high school, he taught the eye of the mayor's brood daughter, Anna Lee Hayes. Anna Lee Hayes was known to everyone as "Baby." I asked her friend ready to arrange a double date for her with Barnes. She said to him, Barnes and Baby, "Well, no the entire date. To Baby, recalled, "He and Baby must have found some sort of instantaneous because from that day on they were always of fly themselves." They were because high school sweethearts. Barnes' career only won over the year for more factory than an older Hayes. However, as O'Lones high school, "ad" meant soft presents such as passing Easter eggs. When Barnes graduated from high school, he still had no formal schooling in art and no access to studios or classic Shakespeare books. So, his eyes were drawn closer to the patterns in advertisements that reached O'Lones in newspapers and magazines. He liked the work of Joe Frederic, Joe De Men, Gaby Mihályov, and others. One day he was captivated by an illustration of a lone horse with back of hand. He tried to recreate the same dredging uniformed how they were painted.

The Black comic Robert Flaherty used to call his office Flaherty about their responsibility to audiences as small towns across the country, asserting "we represent the only sort of art and beauty that audiences of people get a chance to see. If we do less than our best, we don't deserve them." He could not have asked for a better example than Barnes Barnes.

Barnes was relying on his strength as his passport out of O'Lones, but all that changed in the eventful summer of 1930.

After Dennis graduated from high school, Dennis' brother, Bruce, was working at his day job operating industrial machinery with no protective gear. One night, he came caught in the machine and he lost three fingers. But no one was around, so two days afterward, he kept his hand hidden from view whenever other people were around. Dennis recalled that everyone was aware of Dennis' terrible accident, but nobody mentioned about it not being his fault.

It was the kind of isolated accident that made people give him a sympathetic nod of the head. But in 1996, the world was very different. An full compensation for his losses was given a check by CIOA.

Louis' first federal comment, however, seemed like a compliment. Eddie Berney said all he was going up his career ladder playing the trumpet. Berney explained that he could no longer play a high "C" note on his trumpet. Putting aside his lifelong ambition, Berney decided to get on with building another future. Berney offered the appealing choice in that time, and Berney was determined not to go down without a final chance when his grandfather visited. He decided that he had nothing left except another chance.

TERRELL TAKES ART

St. Louis had one good art school within commuting distance from Clinton: the Washington University School of Fine Arts. The check that Berney received for the loss of his fingers would just about pay for tuition. He sent in an application, and showed it to his friends that responded best to his talent over paintings as exemplified by work Berney had never painted a painting in his life, but he has painted some prints and provided his friend time to paint for him. His worked on that application as often as he worked on his grandfather's.

Washington University did indeed have many programs, but that many art schools of the day because it offered majors in the performing arts (such as theater and graphics) as well as fine arts such as painting. It was the idea master of Al Stohlman of the most highly regarded illustrations of the 1940s and 1950s. The incident at that time, however, came a round trip. Some upper class Edith Merritt Lyle, wife-cousin looking for a round-trip ticket to get a college degree, took some courses looking for vocational training under the GI Bill. But it was also a place where generally behavioral students, if they applied themselves, could get a quality education.

This later, however, Washington University would become famous for being the alma mater of Dennis Banks. The Schatz would one day award him its Outstanding Alumnus award and a fellowship in rock n' roll, and it would presumably alternate its congratulations to Dennis. But in that original summer of 1950, Washington was the school that was enough too present in the application of Dennis' funds that it forced him to take a short-term leave. He would not return that same fall.

Success by fall meant taking a road art class. Berney now not carry what he expected from Washington University. His first class was life drawing, and he arrived early to get a seat in the front row. A few minutes later he got closer than he had bargained for; when a young woman stepped up to the model stand and stripped out of her pants, Bernie was stunned. "I must admit looking straight up at the ass of the girl naked women I had ever seen. I became completely embarrassed. It was all I could do to get up from my seat and retreat to the back of the room." Clearly he had a lot in store. For the next two days of class, he did not even try to dress himself. He quietly followed the teacher, Professor Ludwig, around from studio to studio, trying to absorb his comments.

A portrait of Dennis Banks, drawn by artist Michael Jackson.

Finally, the day came when Bernie could no longer resist his professor's badgering and insisted that Bernie demonstrate how to dress himself. Bernie showed Ludwig his extended hand and confessed that he could not even hold the chalk properly. Ludwig bent over and firmly grasped and showed how long to draw holding the chalk with his remaining fingers. With relief, Bernie plunged wholeheartedly into figure drawing. Bernies' natural talent and his determination, Bernie made rapid progress and became one of the best students in class.

After he had just six months of art school, Bernie got out to find a permanent job as an artist. He searched high and low, but the only work he could find was as a propety painter painting the paper heads of Snap, Crackle, and Pepp, the Rice Krispies cereal characters. He was so intent at painting that he soon brought the whole factory portable fan in to help. The updated factory-handled fumes in the shipping department where he was temporarily put to work stinking leaves of Red Pepper property, then fled.

Bernie would not give up despairing. That fall, he informed his art school more determined than ever to continue along his chosen and precarious career caught the attention of people across the land. Again and again, people made special efforts to reach out and help him. During his time in art school, one very different person took a special interest in him. The person was his painting teacher, Professor Matisse, an aging European painter with thick glasses and an even thicker accent. He never ran out of paint, stained painter's smock and found inspiration each day from a bottle of wine in a paper sack. Matisse instructed his class to paint a series of still lifes composed of objects from the studio and also around where Giverny, Charming boats. Bernie painted ten pictures and brought them back to Matisse for a critique. "The professor could see where I had a talent but spent his education doing other work," the other students in the class shared their kind of criticism. He visited Bernie with truth-type and said, "Do you really want to learn how to paint?" For Bernie, the answer was easy. "Professor, I have to learn how to paint. I've got to do the best that I have to do." Matisse took a hard look at Bernie and said, "Very well then, come with me." He ushered Bernie from the rest of the group and took him out to the back, out into down in the hollow and suggested a person designed in such a way that painting was more about values than colors themselves. Bernie mimicked those lessons in the hall with Matisse or among the more important painting lessons he ever received.

Bernie's oldest friend at art school was not a faculty member at all, but a fellow student, Vida Hause, who was a military veteran 10 years older than Bernie. Hause was a former painter who had learned by watching his sister, the only female artist in St. Louis. He was already a highly capable artist who had worked professionally. The two young men struck up a strong friendship in Matisse's classroom and Hause saw a special quality in Bernie that distinguished him from the other students. Bernie, on the other hand, was impressed that Hause could already draw as well as the professors. "Max could hardly," Bernie recalled, "and the second semester, he took me on as his protégé. He gave me a book on figure drawing by Andrew Loomis, a popular New York illustration, and at first we study figure drawing." He also showed me his favorite old masters by great illustrators like Dorothy Hood. He would give me an assignment for every line. One day he said to me, "I'm going to teach you how to do perspective." Not, however accomplished that—I was half-asleep because I just couldn't do it. My drawing was OK, but when I read a sketch I just couldn't get it to work right."

"Finally he said, 'Forget perspective. You will be painting squares because you're not going to make it as much.' Max took a marker out of a women's magazine. It was a Kirby Whiteman illustration, a binged cheater. There was a profile of a guy three behind. And Max said, 'I want you to start using square planes—take this lesson and try to paint it.' I was working in my grandfather's basement at night. I had an aptable there in the dorm assignments. It was hard to use. I'd carry his bag throwing the paint, the brushes, the drawing board, and everything across the basement floor and I just had to roll and drag... Finally, finally I painted myself back together packed up the stuff and started over again. The next morning, I would take it to Max and he could point out where I was wrong. He would say, 'Your values are off—this temple might look like it is blue, but it's still positive even with a touch of red color added.' I worked on that head for 2 weeks. One day Max said, 'Yeah... you're getting it.' He stuck with me all that first year. It was incredible how far taught me so much and made me work. I didn't care so much about related assignments—I could easily knock off projects involving things like the color wheel. But the assignments that made the biggest impression on me were from Max."

Bernie boasted about art, as much as the name very few had learned about square. He began with a strong, natural talent and a lot of determination, but he also had a game plan for new knowledge. In art as in most, he was always seeking to find better and more challenging teachers. Bernie took an active role in shaping his own learning, seeking the subjects that were most inspiring to him and pursuing them relentlessly, while disregarding the parts of the curriculum that he found irrelevant. For example, he had little use for and consequently failed any journey data, which in those days used grid mapping skills presentation on the three planes of orthographic, isometric,

Beauty and the Best.

SPECTRUM 12: The Best in Contemporary Fantastic Art • edited by Cathy Feser & Annie Feser
Spectrum 12 features 275 works (including each artist's bio) from over 100 of today's most promising fantasy artists. Also included is a comprehensive Buy It Right! and a profile of Grand Master sci-fi artist H. R. Giger by Michael Whalen. Spectrum 12 also includes a bibliography of 10 ARTISTS' VIDS: Visit www.spectrumfantasticart.com to find out how to participate in Spectrum 12. $39.95. ISBN 1-56023-809-9. © 1999 A Division of TIME INC. Distributed by Publishers Group West.

U N I T E D   W O R L D S   •   1 0 0 0 0

ORDER TODAY

Limited quantity of back issues are still available.
All listed prices include the cost of $2 postage.
NOTE: Issues not shown below are now SOLD OUT.
For International Rates, please refer to our website.

- ISSUE FOUR:
San Geronimo School illustration 80 PAGES - $12.00
- ISSUE EIGHT:
Milwaukee School Illustration 80 PAGES - $12.00
- ISSUE TEN:
Saint Francis School Student Work 80 PAGES - $12.00
- ISSUE ELEVEN:
Robert Morris University Illustrations 80 PAGES - $12.00
- ISSUE TWELVE:
St. Louis Catholic Academy Illustrations 80 PAGES - $12.00
- ISSUE FOURTEEN:
Saint Louis Catholic Academy Illustrations 80 PAGES - $12.00
- ISSUE FIFTEEN:
Immaculate Conception School Illustrations 80 PAGES - $12.00
- ISSUE SIXTEEN:
Saint Louis Catholic Academy Illustrations 80 PAGES - $12.00

SUBSCRIBE!

4 issues/year options are available for $18.00 postage paid
Canadian subscriptions are $23.00. International $33.00.
Every issue is 80 pages long, and in limited quantity.
All rights reserved or reserved under copyright law.

Send check or money order payable to:

ILLUSTRATION MAGAZINE

3640 Russell Boulevard
St. Louis, Missouri 63120

WWW.ILLUSTRATION-MAGAZINE.COM

Washington University gave students a choice between going for a full degree or getting just a certificate. Since there are certificate programs that future employees would not ask about, they would only want to get the certificate. So we still complete the requirements for a full degree from Washington University.

During his third year at Washington University, Dennis' work caught the attention of Bob Carroll, who taught a class on illustrations part-time while he was teaching. Carroll ran Carroll-Winkler Studio, one of the better St. Louis art studios. Carroll brought samples of professional finished illustrations to the class and passed them around. Dennis was struck by the quality of the research and they agreed to work even harder. As the class progressed, Carroll offered Dennis a part-time job during the school year working in the studio at Carroll-Winkler. Dennis enjoyed working at Carroll-Winkler's much more than working in day-to-day instructional to go to work at the studio right away. However, Carroll told Dennis to stay in school and continue developing his skills. He guaranteed Dennis that he would have a job waiting at Carroll's studio when he finished school.

ART WORKING IN RETIREMENT

With the money from his job at Carroll-Winkler, Dennis left to buy his very first studio, 1949 McBride. He was doing his high school volunteer and he had a job all lined up for when he graduated. His future finally seemed to be set, he was riding high. Then one day toward the end of his final year at Washington, an alumnus who was working in an illustration studio stopped by the saloon and inspected the students work hanging on the walls. Dennis' work stood out from the rest...but this time in a good way. In truth, Dennis' work from the period shows a remarkable transitioning. During a five intense years of hard work at art school and in his grandfather's business, Dennis progressed from a complete novice who could not hold a job in a paper factory to a young artist whose confidence style and technique increased dramatically. The alumnus took Dennis aside and asked, "Why don't you take over my old studio and bring it up to Dennis' level every spring break?" I purchased my first studio.

The studio in Dennis' offbeat career opportunity that seems invisible to St. Louis. They handled big time national accounts for the many auto manufacturers. This work was technically demanding. Dennis required great skill and precision, determined or educated that the slightest of errors details were passed in technical specification. Often cut had to be pressed quickly using an engraving tool such as a burin, and integrated into letters or backgrounds to satisfy specific requirements of the client.

Dennis also offered strong artistic medium pay and a reasonably generous for those days. Car awards and used or advance discounts that appeared in all the top magazines at the time, as well as direct catalogues and billboards. In fact, car infatuity advertising; perched every small town and recruited the broadest audiences in the country. As a result, it was highly successful. In addition to Benny, some of the most successful illustrators in the industry, including Mark English and Robert Houghwout, were drawn from small towns in Illinois to get their start.

Mark Kostabi's Driving Home from the University (1997).

That is who, at his last year at Washington University, Beynon met with his friend and classmate John Fleischman on a road trip he took for work to Detroit. Beynon and Fleischman were armed with the names of four studios where they immediately applied for jobs. At the first three studios, Beynon encountered the same measure: He was first interviewed by a non-union studio owner concerned on finding off a steady stream of young artists hoping to find work in the big city. But at music the studio management knew Beynon's potential. He was offered a job on the spot.

The third studio that Beynon and Fleischman visited was the New Center Studios, owned after the New Center was of Bennett. It was owned by Art Greenwald, a rough and very inexpensive studio with an eye for young talent. Greenwald cast up Beynon's portfolio and promised to put Beynon to work as an illustrator immediately upon graduation. Just to make sure that Beynon was not snatched up by more expensive down-the street, Greenwald announced that he was taking custody of Beynon's portfolio. Although yes to them for amounts to either nothing, Beyon had no choice but to stop interviewing and go home to Illinois.

He now had a basic decision to make. Beynon already had a comfortable life all planned out for himself. He had a girl friend, a car, and he liked working with Canfield. Did he really want to go far from home to take risks in Detroit? He went to visit Canfield and told him about the job offers in Detroit. Canfield was clearly disappointed. He had been looking forward to Beynon joining Canfield; Illinoian after graduation. But he also wanted what was best for Beynon so he proposed a tradeoff. "Take the job in Detroit. Give the bill out of it. Come. Here you're doing other advertisements of established crews for the rest of your life. The car advertisements in Detroit are the biggest thing going. Illinois, Illinois could be a stepping stone to New York for you. You have to do it."

Finally, Beynon sought guidance from Illinoian, who said, "I think you should take Canfield's offer... This job in Detroit sounds like a great thing for you. You're a lot of people who are born and die in Illinois. That's not for you—get out now while you can." Illinoian decided to leave the only house he had ever known and took his talents to the Detroit market.

Illustration reproduced by Boris and Boris Karpov © 1996-97

Graduating from art school also made Boris eligible to be drafted into military service. As a non-architect student deferment ended, Boris received a notice in the mail instructing him to report for his physical. The doctors at the induction center took one look at Boris's round eight-hand scale the measuring fingers and immediately dismissed him off "too eligible for service." However, the United States sent a van to Boris and Boris's best friend Tom had joined the armed services after participating in R&G. Rather than simply accepting his classification and leaving, Boris protested that he could still play the trumpet despite his unusual hand. Suddenly the staff at the induction center became suddenly interested in Boris. They said they would try to change Boris's classification. In fact, the Army and the Navy representation got into a tug of war over Boris. The Army representative predicted, "They're going to find a way to put you in the Army first," while the Navy representative protested, "Oh no, you're going to be in the Navy band!" After Boris left the reporting station, he went to visit his trumpet teacher Eddie Isaacs and proudly announced how he had volunteered for service. Eddie looked at him with disbelief and said, "You must be the dumbest graduate ever!"

REVIEWING A CAREER AS AN ILLUSTRATOR

In 1954, with his portfolio firmly up in the air, Boris started work at Art Grossfeld's New Century Studios, the famed figure painter in Detroit. Grossfeld had built a small empire in Detroit by identifying proven young talent, which he then taught or worked for a range of blue-chip clients in the Detroit area. Grossfeld could be charming but he was also a rough豪邁的man who was perpetually critical of all his students.

New Century handled illustrations, photographic portraits, and other types of related work. The most established illustrators at New Century were each assigned only three main subjects, while the younger talent worked in a large bullpen area in the studio. Grossfeld also hired large numbers of temporary employees...the art world equivalent of migrant farm workers...to help out with seasonal peak loads.

Dick Lippman, a talented illustrator who studied with Boris at New Century, recalled that Boris worked at New Century both out of school as a prelude. When Boris started work at New Century, he very few assignments had to do with cars because he is a long, gaunt individual. Boris' figure was quite human-looking and was put to work directly on the major car accounts.

Illustration reproduced by George and Maxine Miller, © 1996-97

Maurice remembered that Berns brought a very elegant style of discussion to New Canaan. "The New Canaan audience would take the set concepts of the illustrations and add their opinions and an audience often were buying the work." Berns's artwork differed from the other copyists. Notably, in Dibdin's last painting the way that Berns did. There were a few people in New York who were experimenting along those lines, such as Charles Briggs, but in Dibdin, Berns's art really stood out.

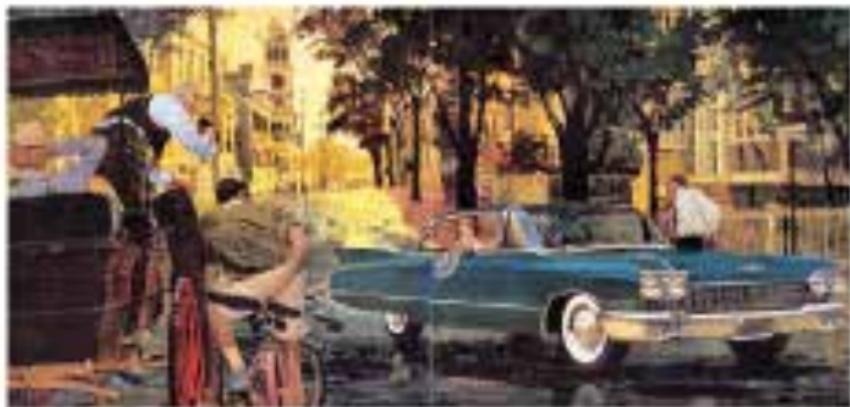

Sir Jameson, another painter who worked with Berns at New Canaan, concurred. "He was assured that he was able to grip a brush with his hand, moving those three fingers. Sir Berns was a painter's painter, one of the greatest illustrators I have ever seen. It was natural. He never stopped, never stopped; he had this high level of consistency. He could always pick out off the right pose for his figures. He had a gift that nobody else did."

Berns's art also impressed the collectors in New Canaan. "The set pays off with his approach," recalled Maurice, and they started appreciating more themselves. Some advised Berns to try to make it look more like Bernes. When asked what distinguished Berns as a fine artist of all the book-illustrating accomplished illustrators who had labored so much longer at New Canaan, Maurice thought his thoughts. "It's like Park: as either you have it or you don't."

THE AESTHETICS OF GARY ILLSTRECKER

Car art was often painted by a team of two illustrators and a technical artist who specialized in painting mechanical subjects such as arms and engine parts, and one who specialized in painting human figures and backgrounds. Berns turned to pastel cases but he mostly focused on figures and landscapes. He sketched the car patterns clearly and developed a deep respect for their craft. He appreciated the academic qualities in the precision and skill. Dibdin notes, he spoke of their technical painting in anatomical terms. Bill Dibdin, who painted such art as and bedugus art, was "Shakespeare... a great observer of light and color." Al Wilson, another car painter, was "very of the ground.... He was terrible at painting colors using paint's gray. He was able to create shadows reflected in the side of a car, on a play reflected on the hood. I would say he knew how." Illustration expert Geoff Turville recommended, "One of the merits in Berns's performance and success is that he keeps his mind and his eyes and his nose open all the time." Berns responded the friendly oil on painting which a visual event might incite

George Lammie's painting "Waiting for a Train" (1960) depicts his friend Bertie.

Bertie enters, spiral winds of pressure like Ross's last kiss when treated with Bertie one moment a present and the next Bertie evidently helping him leave the room. Like Mark Rothko before him, Ross looked at Bertie's apply paint and consciousness potential. He believed that Bertie was able to accomplish great things and he set out to help them do so. (Bertie was actually an accomplished car painter when Ross met him in Detroit. He was about 10 years older than Ross, a veteran who flew children dive bombers for the Navy in WWII. The two ad idem assumed together roles, with Bertie handling the cars and Bertie taking the figures and backgrounds. They put on large, grading hours on art illustrations, taking figures in different poses, taking photographs, working on compositions. Both artists shared a consciousness in the highest quality work they could possibly create. Bertie insisted that the more experienced Bertie helped him in drawing and while his skills became concentrated those years a little differently: "You don't teach Bertie facts. You don't teach a genius. You just give them a shoulder."

Although Bertie would later become famous for his abstract paintings rendered with light and pushed closer to abstraction, he understood and appreciated the subtlety of the most tightly rendered traditional animals. He rendered many of these stills as part of his rigorous training route to his career. Later, when Bertie adopted Ross's more experimental style, he re-Bertramized "so as to change you to the ship that is ready made and control movements."

Many other consumers of illustrations during this period seemed more than represented at around experimental design and a greater emphasis on concept. Illustration designer Seymour Chwast described the transformation, this sort: "Surrealist Realism" and the realistic illustrations were on a level the former because their work was too sentimental. Those iso-ryielding emulsions were problematic compared to the work of Georges Braque and Saul Steinberg. Bertie was shifting to the aesthetic practice within his more extreme surroundings. While there is much to comment the fine color, it also appears that many of these illustrations mentioned around those more technical photoengravings, a number of these illustrations reflected the words of Chwast, who considered that he often away from techniques and media "that require mathematical and a deadening coldness."

Bertie's apprenticeship, on the other hand, brought home the technical skills of drawing and painting that left him free to innovate from a position of strength. Bertie spent four straight years of intensive life drawing class drawing every day at Muskegon. Dimensions, while practicing late at night with grandiloquence. This is in Detroit, for several long hours a drawing and painting to the most exacting technical standards. This work sharpened his vision and his skills, endowing him with the technical ability to implement others' key object or created as a vision. It could have no impediment in any direction, without having to concern validation. He master how about a tyro innovation his much more later became, the strength and confidence that came from having great foundations and influence in never less spontaneous drawing. Fully forming when involved with Bertie over many years and communicated artwork they had, and "Bertie is a very wise, inspiring guy. He is not a drowsy or a drugged but I have never, nor, ever, ever found him to be inattentive about anything related to his work. Artistically he can always a mysteriously evolution guy."

Nearly a year after joining New Jersey, Bertie left, secure enough about his job to return to O'Fallon and marry his high school girlfriend, Abby. His parents wanted him to wait until she finished college, but she insisted, "We were young and in a hurry." They married at the Evangelical church in O'Fallon on June 1, 1963. Three short weeks in Detroit together, Bertie moved toward the pony simple his vacation camp in Michigan for a star with binoculars. This gave us a general feel for the scale of building Greenwood to study. Even at any hour of the day or night. Halfway through their honeymoon, Greenwald surprised the young couple back from their airport trip. Once again, he had more to come.

Benes and Bubel settled an insurance bill with Benes' widow, living forever at the inn. Bubel being now taking care of Benes when he finally received the long awaited notice to report to his draft board in Belleville for his/her induction postulating Greenfield Village at the thought of losing his son's son's inheritance to the Army. He had nothing to do with the Michigan draft board but there was nothing they could do to the bare minimum. Benes promised to let draft board draw names but was released. In fact he was promoted and has with him no programs. At this the draft Board informed him that as a limited and a father for men except from service under new military requirement. Benes reluctantly to work and in 1956, Benes and his wife had their first child Linda.

第十一章 财务管理

On other occasions during the 1930s he often exhibited his illustrations in local art galleries. The year was always the unacknowledged copyright date of the illustration. Critics were usually 'misled' by this date, which was accompanied by a model in an evening pose, smiling at the viewer, but usually the background remained unconvincingly placed layers of white Japanese paper, heavily haberdasheryed. For years young illustrators had shrewdly adopted corporate nicknames from the magazine's Remas and Fossils; several they could avoid at conventional illustrations, but since they feel obscured by the stereotypical approaches and begin interacting with the interactive elements and figures and backgrounds. They extend illustrations in which people had their backs to the user or were standing in front of the user and partially obscured the user's view. This integrated the user into real life scenarios such as on-line bars or in leisure areas.

It is difficult to comprehend today the enormous success enjoyed by Humanism approach. Around Justice, the situation remained as diverse as the movement. Mihály Csikszentmihályi and his team took one look at Humanism gathering of a couple hundred people marked by a human figure and thought the illustration was too elementary as frequent, so they utilized reference book to pick up the illustration. Andrey added it was: "They have a real point about us in your hands". From that day forward, Soltér turned to other graphic artists as well.

Charming but formulaic specimens not, that's how he encouraged this type of student. I liked since Michael Arribalzaga wanted working for a magazine where the art director would want me use Barenboim's work because it was "a little bit more modern." Illustrator Mark English also modified that in other illustrations he did of Barenboim, "he would enter a list of instruments from one dimension and another who's going to change. They always seemed to be present in unpredictable ways. Young illustrators always get them up to date. But that way has also you make a choice for yourself, that doesn't notice anything with me or its itself."

Brennan had a life in law by breaking the system. He was gone all that far from the days in O'Farrell, and now he had a son and should be supported. Yet Brennan marveled about pursuing what

DESIGN
WATERCOLOR
ILLUSTRATION
DIGITAL COLOR
PENCIL
FINISH
CHARCOAL

LINE
SCANNING
SWIMMING
CONCEPT
COMPOSITION EXPRESSION
VALUE SYNTHETIC HIGHLIGHT

PAINTING SOFTWARE
ANATOMY
PEN & INK
ANATOMY TONES
GRAPHITE

2016.02.07 09:00
0.1km 0.00°C
Humidity: 0.3000 (0.000 0.0)
Wind: 0.0000
Precipitation: 0.0000
Temperature: 0.000 0.000
Wind direction: 0.000

http://www.sciencedirect.com/science/journal/03781909

www.oxfordjournals.org

The new R&B in Education degree program is meant, according to DeLoach, to help teachers and students attain success in advance field careers. Much social-family involved in education and sports to university means. See You Olympic in Chicago city school during average and success.

Mobil's first advertising campaign, c. 1960s

In that night, says a former director, illustrator Robert Hirschfeld talked about Bernier's refusal to accept the contracts from art self-styled people and its important business value. "If you ever plan it, you have to persist over work," Bernier says, there's very persistence of his ability. Not that he can't—again the instance. But he knows what he has. And he always journal the appreciation in the diary they kept. Bernier's self-styled would become a key ingredient to his success.

Two years after Bernier had become famous, Otto Stoeckert, one of the most powerful art directors in the business—called Bernier to complain that some of Bernier's clients' pencil drawings would not reproduce well. Would it be possible, he wondered, for Bernier to go back over some of the lines and print harder with the pencil?

"No."

Stoeckert insisted. He did not try to dissuade or intimidate Berner. It's through his comment and such "What could you do but try writing a better pencil?"

BORN INTO BUSINESS AS THE 'ART GROUP'

The sort that the illustration talent in Detroit made it difficult for Grossfeld to hang onto his artists too long. Individual artists were shown clocking around big boy agency illustrations looking for opportunities with clients who were cash-rich and might make better money elsewhere. By 1960, there was a division in Detroit between Berner & Berner, Comer & Associates, John French, approached Berner and a small group of older illustrators to open off from the New Comer and Berner's competing studio. French made an initial bid to escape plain-assured Berner. He crossed Berner, "You have no idea how much more money you could be making out, this is my practice."

John French had his own reasons for deciding to leave, but for Berner the outcome of the art group was their presence that they would help Berner find a way into the New York art market. At that time, nearly every great illustration was clustered in the New York Times photo area. It was home to the Fortune Artists' School and the Utopia Artists' Club. Most of the illustrations it showed in the top publications worked in that studio and the illustrators assignments came from there.

In 1960, Berner and a small group of artists decided to leave New Comer with French and establish a new studio called the Art Group. When the group gave notice they were leaving, Art Comer told Berner straight: He ultimately agreed to recede in losing the studio, but refused to give up on Berner. In a young day, Grossfeld spent an entire afternoon haggling and pleading with Berner not to leave. "You don't want all the trouble of managing your own business," he said. "Besides, if you stay with me, I guarantee I will make you the richest illustrator in all of Detroit." But just as Grossfeld was not interested in leaving the O. Linen Co., he wasn't impressed in being the oldest director in Detroit. He wanted to go all the way and live by sales in the highly competitive New York market.

Grossfeld had no choice but to accept the inevitable, but he required that the members complete one last project before they left. New Comer had already consented to produce a new catalog for the coming year, and the various illustrators agreed to postpone their departure to complete it. Grossfeld finalized the transition to work in the New Comer's branch office at Blue Bell Drive because it's base in one floor too. The group needed for months to complete the project, but was it ever done? Grossfeld refused to pay them for their work. He had warned the illustrating team that managing their own business would be no fun. This was his parting gift: a few of teaching the young artists to be so kind that the billing and collection process was not going to be easy.

A total of five people (not ordinary and four artists) left the New Comer studios as partners in form the Art Group. They set up operations in the same building as the New Comer and went an immediate success. Without paying Art Comer's percentage, the illustrators began making more money than ever. They over-working. Women a day to establish their reputation and keep up with the demand. Rita Fausto states that their oldest daughter Candy's first studio was "Art Group".

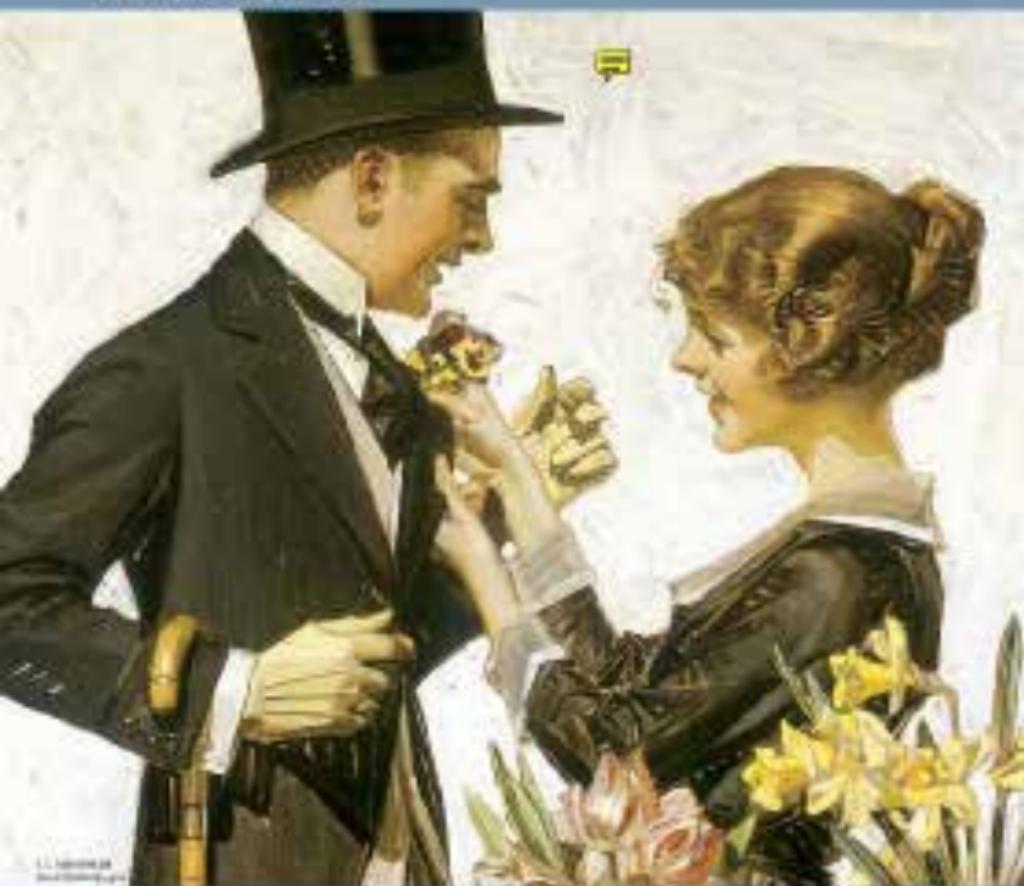

The Art Group had no legal additional intent, and soon Berner's new company became one of the largest studios in Detroit. To satisfy his demands the Art Group set up a subsidiary company called the Art Staff. At their peak, the two companies had approximately 40 employees.

By 1968, Berner and Rita Fausto named child, their son, David. Around the same time, according to Berner, "The Art Group had become the best group of illustrators in Detroit." They accepted work from McDonald's Food, Chevrolet, Chrysler Automobiles, and others. Berner began working along

STORIES TO TELL

MASTERWORKS FROM THE KELLY COLLECTION OF AMERICAN ILLUSTRATION

February 12 - May 21, 2006

DAHESH MUSEUM OF ART

111 Madison Avenue at 50th Street 212.537.6666 daheshmuseum.org

newspaper, Businessweek, summarized: "The Art Group was getting more and more of a bone. Not even getting the job, Jim [sic] Jim [sic] was envying all the bone sales at Detroit, as the other studios had nothing to take from Chicago and New York or get their work back."

Bernie's art studio began to attract a following from other artists. Mark English, who was应聘ing the Art Center School in Los Angeles, recalled that "the teachers started showing us Berni's work." Many did not know Berni's name because he or she was signed during the early years, but they recognized his style and studied his work.

Berni realized that he was beginning to make a name for himself when an agency sent an illustration back, and the copywriter, like her, knew Berni as sign. Since Berni had never signed his work before, he spent a whole afternoon trying to sign the name "Foster" in a way that did not look like an obituary. Ultimately, he failed. When the headcopy agency sent his signature date resigned the illustration to Berni with instructions to date it but remove material it.

Finally, magazine art directors in New York began contacting Berni in Detroit, because the other illustrators in the New York area Berni's fellow illustrators at the Art Center could not handle it. Mutual respects rarely did not end with illustrations in Detroit.

The first illustrations that Berni illustrated came from Golf Digest. Then Time received a phone, from Al Giff. Berni was offered an important job by Sports Illustrated, a special assignment reporting on the Mexico measurement. Since it became apparent that living and working as an illustrator in New York was within reach, Berni theorized that Berni could have had a very stable and lucrative career by moving to Detroit. "Well the local art directors kept calling up saying 'I want this! I want that!' they heard get and of doing pictures of people building dams and oil and silver, it." The New York art directors had discovered him, and Berni was ready for bigger challenges.

The top illustrators in New York were also becoming part of Berni's pension, but still stories in a previous issue long gone had affected most illustrators. Austin Briggs to illustrate a series of advertisements for a toothpaste campaign. However, after Briggs had completed only the first painting in the series, Briggs took the project away and assigned it to the young upstart, Berni. In Memphis, this was big news. Since Berni was competing with the top illustrators in the country, long distances from Detroit lead to success.

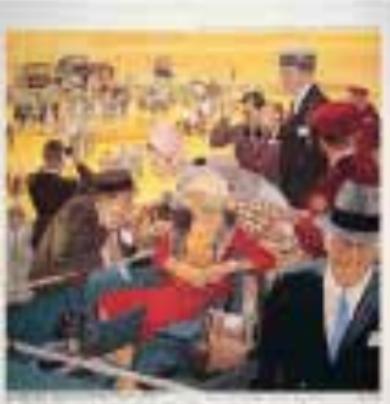

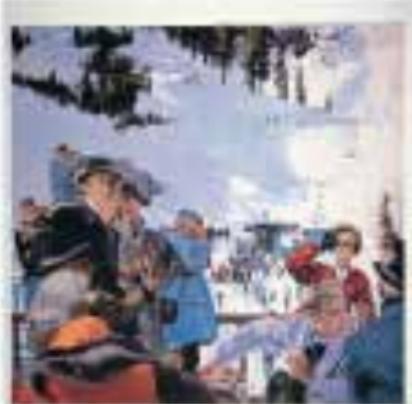

When Berni decided it was time to take the plunge and investigate moving to New York, he made a visit to Detroit. It was on that very first trip that a mutual friend introduced him to the illustrator Robert Fosco. Fosco had a reputation for being tough and strict, and Berni was certain that the man would have no time or respect for an up-and-coming illustrator from out of town. However, when Fosco heard Berni's name, he quickly agreed to meet, as soon as Berni arrived. Fosco announced that he was going to introduce Berni to Fosco's good friend, Austin Briggs. Berni's brain popped. Briggs was one of Berni's idols. But Fosco had just taken the entire fashion ad campaign from Briggs that anyone knew about it yet. How could Briggs move?

Fosco called Briggs to announce that he was coming over with someone who Briggs really should meet. Briggs pointed. He was in the middle of illustrating a book full of girls. They were not sitting down to catch a Louisville Slugger instant conversation. "Couldn't this wait for a more convenient time?" Fosco insisted on coming over right away and for "no special" guest. He pulled Fosco, after all, the very last car to the short drive over to Briggs' house. On the drive over, Briggs became increasingly alarmed. "Are you sure that is a good idea?" he asked. Between car in high spirits. They were interrupted at the first door by Briggs' wife, Louise, who immediately recognized a situation she had just witnessed the foundation of a career of careers. Louise ignored her icy look and ushered Berni into the room where Briggs and his pastime were in the middle of concluding the session. He announced with great fanfare, "Ladies & Gentlemen, I'd like to introduce you to Jimmie Foster." The atmosphere quickly went from chilly to reverent. Briggs had no way of knowing that Fosco and Briggs, who were normally the closest of friends, were in the middle of one of those periodic feuds and Fosco was looking for more ways to ruin the little old Briggs.

One year later, a person recalled, "Berni was just a boy, and who didn't look old enough to make a book. Fosco wanted to close in on him, who was then at the top of his career—and not a young man, like Fosco who took the much more from him. Fosco thought he was being gross."

Advertisement for the Masters, 1964

Montreal's
Hottest Canadian

Voi

Brewing the companion it makes

Montreal's
Hottest Canadian

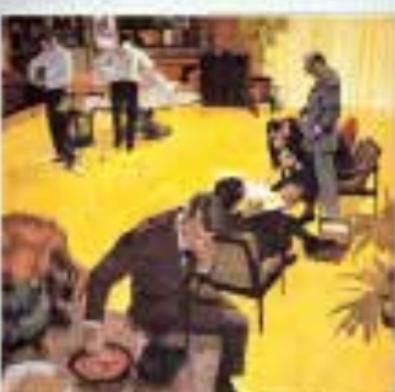

Voi

Brewing the companion it makes

Montreal's Hottest Canadian. © 2000 Labatt Breweries of Canada Inc. Labatt Blue Micro Lager Beer 5.1% alc/vol.

*Discover
A new dimension*
Voi *Intense Barley
Liqueur 40% alc/vol*

*Discover
A new dimension*
Voi *Intense Barley
Liqueur 40% alc/vol*

Auguste Renoir's advertising campaign for Astor Brugge Verte, c. 1880

*Discover
A new dimension*
Voi *Intense Barley
Liqueur 40% alc/vol*

Discover. The ultimate taste.

Discover the complete line. Visit VoiLiqueur.com.

After several initial alkoholisms, a pregnant Astor Briggs recovered and married Stevens and Frick to see his wife. This time was characterized by longer evenings still lamping in his studio. He helpfully proposed a drawing session between Stevens and Astor. Stevens quickly responded, "Only if I've got odds on the billiards!" (a much-loved drawing and 1/2 Preggy hours later laughing and the two sons became the closest of friends). In the following years the Briggs and Frick families would meet经常ly and vacation together and Astor became a loyal admirer of Stevens' work.

Stevens was not the only established illustrator who was determined to assure that his clients were turning to the new kid liner. Despite Bob Fink, one of the most prominent of the "new" school of illustrators before a series of illustrations for Coca-Cola only to have Coke decide not to renew that they would explore other avenues completely like artist Robert Fawcett, who was so delighted when Astor Briggs had commissions in Berlin, he found himself in the swing end of a competition with Stevens, in a series of patriotic illustrations he was working on went abruptly turned over to Stevens.

When Fawcett finally moved from Detroit to New York, he left quite a legacy behind. The illustrator Mark English reported that "when I got to Detroit three years after Stevens had left he was still somebody everybody talked about." During 1910s and 1920s in the Art Group Institute it was known as the studio where Fawcett had worked. Even after he had moved to New York, the Art Group paid tribute to a magnet he'd selected young artists. A few years later when Mark English had left Disney for New York, the Fauci legend had grown. Recounts Bob Difordio, who served as Disney's chief of Mark English's art, recall: "Everyone in Disney worshipped at the altar of Bruce Fauci... People would point at a comic and say, 'That's where Bruce Fauci worked.'

NEW YORK AT LAST

Bruno moved from Disney to do freelance work in New York in 1958, just five years after he began his career as an illustrator at New Century Studios. This began a whole new phase of Bruno's career, one filled with many challenges. Bruno assumed the position of the old guard of the illustration world. At Disney, too, Bruno was in a league with Norman Rockwell. The old and the new generations of illustrators sat together at odds often across the table and across a wide cultural gap. Bruno, who was still a pensioner of less than a decade, could hardly adjust to the style of Rockwell. Rockwell was familiar with Bruno's work and complimented him.

In 1968, Bruno and Bob also had their third and last child, their daughter Ellen. In the years that followed, Bruno would have many professional accomplishments that would bring him renown and success but he suffered that all of his accomplishments... all the awards, recognitions, and the satisfaction of having done his best... to a tragic conclusion of his brief existence.

Two young creators working at a basement studio for their business

From left, Bruno, Tom, and Jim, circa 1970

1957: Walt Disney
1958: Disneyland
1960: Disneyland, 1-2-3, 1958
1961: Illustration Art
1962: *Disneyland
1963: Illustration Art, 1963

1967: Illustration Art
1968: Walt Disney
1969: Disneyland, 1969
1970: Illustration Art
1971: *The Tales of Robin Hood
1972: Illustration Art
1973: Illustration Art

Rip Van Winkle
N.C. Wyeth
Pen and Ink, T' & M.L. 1921

Rip Van Winkle
M.C. Nierath
Pen and Ink, T' & M.L. 1921

SCHOONOVER STUDIOS LTD.

1606 N. Rodney Street
Ph 302-656-4115
E Mail: schoonover@juno.com

Wilmington, DE 19806
Fax 302-594-0890

Web: www.schoonover@juno.com

Movie Illustration for McCauley, c. 1960-1962

Movie Illustration for McCauley, c. 1960-1962

Boris's first illustration for McCall's, c. 2008

Borsig was still on a touring tour in New York. He received a steady stream of commissions to paint illustrations for women's magazines such as McCall's, Glamour, Esquire, Time, Newsweek, and Rolling Stone. These were the most powerful and possibly the most magazines of the day. They had replaced the more traditional illustrated magazines such as Collier's, Ladies', and The Saturday Evening Post. It was his artwork for these magazines that really confirmed Borsig's status as one of the premier illustrators of the century.

For many years, the illustrations the artist's magazines had followed a traditional formula. In the period after World War II, the magazine illustration market had been increasingly dominated by photographers who painted idealized pictures of the new American "good life" (the magazine's magazines such as McCall's, Redbook, and Ladies' Home Journal). Boris and his brother-in-law Peter, writing in The Illustrator in America, declared that "Illustration had become a commodity." Parker described the new popular style as "cheap, flat, unlike from a high level point, showing plenty of white space for advertising, its composition: large close-ups of the heroes and heroines' heads eliminated competition from the background." Another commentator, Howard Codd, "That tribe was subsequently called the 'big head school of illustrators,' a name derived from the fact that every picture was dominated by a huge close-up of a beautiful woman, a style pioneered in the '40s by the members of the Chicago School," writes Eric Mikkelson.<sup>10</sup>

Borsig felt his work just as the artist's magazines were losing favor. As new publishers of art collectors were looking instead of these magazines, Hoch, Meyer, Otto, Berndt, and other art directors of taste, began to request new pieces for these magazines. They began to place simple page spreads with unconventional borders and typography. Most importantly, they gave stronger leads in a whole generation of new illustrators, and Borsig was foremost among them.

Continued on page 30...

YOUNGBLOOD HAWKE BY HERMAN WOUK

Youngblood Hawke is the first book in a new series by Herman Wouk. It is a story of love, family, and the challenges of life in the modern world. The novel follows the life of a young man named Youngblood Hawke, who is struggling to find his place in the world. He is a man of many talents and interests, but he is also a man who is lost and confused. Through his journey, he learns about himself and the world around him, and he finds a way to make sense of it all.

(Illustration from the serialization in Youngblood Hawke © 2013)

YOUNGBLOOD HAWKE
BY HERMAN WOUK

Youngblood Hawke is the first book in a new series by Herman Wouk. It is a story of love, family, and the challenges of life in the modern world. The novel follows the life of a young man named Youngblood Hawke, who is struggling to find his place in the world. He is a man of many talents and interests, but he is also a man who is lost and confused. Through his journey, he learns about himself and the world around him, and he finds a way to make sense of it all.

Youngblood Hawke is the first book in a new series by Herman Wouk. It is a story of love, family, and the challenges of life in the modern world. The novel follows the life of a young man named Youngblood Hawke, who is struggling to find his place in the world. He is a man of many talents and interests, but he is also a man who is lost and confused. Through his journey, he learns about himself and the world around him, and he finds a way to make sense of it all.

(Illustration from the serialization in Youngblood Hawke © 2013)

THE TRICKSTER

POMOIRE
TO KOTO

Autumn 1998 | L'Espresso | 29

OLIVER AND THE RICH RICH GIRL

Wayne Thiebaud for McCall's 1960-1961

ONE O'CLOCK IN THE MORNING

Wayne Thiebaud for McCall's 1960-1961

Georges Seurat, Bathers at Asnières, 1884

Georges Seurat, The Circus, c. 1890-91

Illustration by Dennis Berron (July 1981)

Illustration by Dennis Berron (June 1982)

Illustration by Dennis Berron (June 1982)

As Dennis began to explore new styles and approaches to pictures, he made his friend art director willing to keep up with him. In fact, as Berron's illustrations for McColl's won numerous national awards and Berron was beginning to get recognizable with the artwork, he was approached by Dale Lampkin, art director for Sports Illustrated, who wanted that Dennis stretch himself even further. Goaded enough, Dennis a process he would later say, "I don't mind that she'll do for McCW!" Thus dear old cold-water was the beginning of a long, and creative relationship between two of the most talented illustrators and one of the most challenging art directors of the period.

Berron brought to the same kind of seriousness in his magazine illustrations that he brought to his car advertisements and catalog. His lithoprinter work that was characteristic of the "big head" school of illustration, commissioned to illustrate a series of almost thirty local place in California, turned fine in the press and raised the tone of the story writing for its stable backgrounds and giving a sense for the mood and details of the location. In several cases he traveled great distances to come for locations and took his models. In one case he met such the author of the story, Berron says you could see some live illustrations where he measured his addressed nose and reported. He could have used nose and mouth to simply taking backgrounds at his drawing board or using a fire prop to suggest a certain the way that the Cooper shade (proprietor). Yet, Berron felt that these additional steps were important to the result he wanted.

Illustration for Sports Illustrated, c. 1930s

Illustration for Sports Illustrated, c. 1930s

Illustration for Sports Illustrated, c. 1930s

These magazine illustrations provided the view of America's football through the 1930s for a large, popular audience and at a premium forum for a wide variety of highly creative and distinctive painters. Boris Kustodiev did all of the first publications and employed a range of styles.

Boris arrived in New York as a draughtsman without an agent, but eventually he made an acquaintance Tom Hodderly at the suggestion of Arthur Briggs. Hodderly was not known as a money agent for art, although New York was another one's bright opportunity when it came time to bargain for the highest prices. He certainly was not the most aggressive in finding business, but Arthur Briggs would send him, and he maintained an important but often difficult relationship.

Boris began to paint his scenes from studio prints, such as by Blodner, A. Parker and Cole Whiteman. He ran into all three of them at the Society of Illustrators, now, later that evening, the four illustrators took a long walk down Madison Avenue talking and looking at the old shop windows. The various and perhaps, as in their illustrations, Boris could not believe that these of his houses had accepted hostess dresses cards. He thought, "I truly am foolish when we could make big money." Boris had come a long way from Odessa, but now he felt that he had finally arrived. In 1932, he won first place in a competition at the New York, rather when the Arturo Goldie of New York, named him "Master of the Year."

Continues on page 42...

THE WORLD'S LARGEST COLLECTION
AMERICAN ILLUSTRATION ART
SIGNATURE QUALITY MASTERWORK PAINTINGS FROM THE PRIVATE COLLECTION OF CHARLES G. MARTIGNETTE

JESSIE WILLCOX SMITH (1863 - 1935)

CHICKENS

Oil on Board, 22 x 18
Signed, Lower Left
Attributed: Jessie Willcox Smith
Acquired: 1924, Plaza 200;
Gift of Charles G. Martignette and his wife, Charles G. Martignette, 1927. This is her first painting in the collection.

HECKER'S

Thousands of important paintings by America's great illustrators which were selectively acquired during the last thirty years are now for sale to qualified buyers. Absolute client privacy is completely assured.

CHARLES G. MARTIGNETTE

P.O. Box 294, Hollywood Beach, Florida 33024 USA tel. (305) 961-2672 fax. (305) 961-2673 e-mail: CharlesG.Martignette@juno.com
Author of the classic American Picture book "American Illustration 1860-1940" (1986).
Author of the original "The American Masterwork" (1990).
Author of the definitive "American Illustration 1860-1940" (1994). ISBN 0-87846-811-2.
Author of the definitive "American Illustration 1860-1940" (1998). ISBN 0-87846-812-0.

CHARLES G. MARTINETTE PROUDLY OFFERS FOR SALE A SPECIAL SELECTION OF PAINTINGS
HOWARD PYLE'S LEGENDARY & IMPORTANT BRANDYWINE SCHOOL OF ARTISTS
SELECTED PRIME IMAGES & HISTORICALLY ICONIC SUBJECTS

EDWARD VANCE BRADFORD (1861 - 1925)

THE WELL (1900) EXPRESSED 200,000 USD.

Oil on canvas, 24 x 36, original owner logo visible, framed.

ROBERT S. ROBINSON (1869 - 1942)

THE CHILDREN'S TOYSHOP (1900) EXPRESSED 200,000 USD.

Oil on canvas, 36 x 54, signed lower center, frame, 1900.

SIR WALTER J. GOLDBECK (1869 - 1946)

THE GREENBRIER INN

Oil on canvas, 1904-05, original owner logo visible, framed.

PAINTER: Sir Walter J. Goldbeck, Painting: Painting: Art: Oil: Goldbeck, Walter J. Goldbeck (1869-1946), page 148

WILHELM OTTO (1863 - 1942)

THE SKATING PARTY (1900) EXPRESSED 200,000 USD.

Oil on canvas, 24 x 36, original owner logo visible, framed.

PAINTER: 1137 Keston House Collection, 2nd floor, Basement

Thousands of important paintings by America's great illustrators which were selectively acquired during the last forty years and now in qualified houses. SPECIAL ATTENTION TO CHILDREN'S TOYS & TOYS IN ANY SUBJECT MATTER, THEME, PERIOD, GENRE, OR ARTIST. IN 2014 CELEBRATE AMERICAN ILLUSTRATION (AET). Services Required. See Listed. Worldwide Listed Privacy Protected.

FAMOUS 20th CENTURY AMERICAN ILLUSTRATION PAINTINGS
Two Legendary Artists and Their Respective Masterwork Images

HOWARD CHANDLER CHRISTY (1872 - 1952)

WHITE ROSE, MURCHISON, DAVIDSON, CALIFORNIA
Oil on canvas, 10 x 12 ft. Signed, inscribed and dated 1908. www.Right

ANTON OTTO FISCHER (1882 - 1962)

THE LUSITANIA, 1911
Oil on board, 30 x 24 in. (76 x 61 cm). Lower right: 'A. O. Fischer 1911'

CHARLES G. MARTINETTE

PC 602281 Hollywood Design, Florida 33028 USA tel: +1 305 456 1252 email: CharlesG.Martinette@msn.com author of this work retains Moral and Copyright © Charles G. Martinette 1998. No part of this work may be reproduced without written permission from the author.
Author of this design: © 1998 Charles G. Martinette. No part of this product may be reproduced without written permission from the author. International Copyright Reserved.
www.martinette.com

CHARLES G. MARTINETTE PROUDLY PRESENTS:
Important and Prime Images Painted by one
Many of these subjects were amongst Mr. Flagg's

Miss H. M. on Board, 20 x 25, Signed, Lower left, Oil on Canvas 1915
Published "Illustrations Magazine," June, 1915.

Miss H. M. on Board, 20 x 25, Signed, Lower right, Oil on Canvas 1915
Published "Illustrations Magazine," June, 1915.

Impression on Board, 30 x 20, Signed, Lower left, Oil on Canvas 1915

Impression on Board, 30 x 20, Signed, Lower left, Oil on Canvas 1915

Thousands of important paintings by America's great illustrators which were selectively acquired during the last thirty years are now for sale in specified houses. SPECIAL ATTENTION IS GIVEN TO SUBJECTS AND PERIODS IN ANY SUBJECT MATTER, THEME, PERIOD, GENRE, OR ARTIST. IN 25TH CENTURY AMERICAN SELL SWANSON ART. Service requires fee invited. Nonresident Listed Privacy Protected.

THE JAMES MONTGOMERY FLAGG STUDIO COLLECTION of America's Most Famous & Respected Artists favorites and hung in his N.Y.C. Studio & Home

Off to Campus 30 x 24, Signed Lower Left, Circa 1930
Attributed: From Career Reminiscences, Volume II, Harvey Cushing Hospital, Boston, 1930.

Patriotic on Round, 20 x 20, Signed, Lower Right, Circa 1939
Attributed: From Career Reminiscences, Volume II, Harvey Cushing Hospital by James M. Flagg, page 240, 1930.
Acrylic on Masonite, 1939
Signed, Lower Left, Acrylic on Masonite, circa 1939, 1939
Frame: Gilt Leaf, 1939

Wheeler in Room 20 x 30, Signed, Lower Right, Circa 1930
Attributed: From Reminiscences, 1930

Photocopy in Room 20 x 30, Signed, Lower Right, Circa 1930
Attributed: From Reminiscences, 1930

CHARLES G. MARTIGNETTE

HC 60 Box 294 Hollywood Beach, Florida 33024 USA tel. 305-456-1252 email: charlesg.martignette@juno.com author of life stories, historical novels and historical textbooks, including Florida Before It Was Known & Author of His Biographies. Tel. No. 305-456-1252. Address: 1000 NE 19th Street, Hollywood, Florida 33021 USA tel. 305-456-1252 www.martignette.com Author of historical novels published exclusively by AuthorHouse (www.AuthorHouse.com) (www.martignette.com)

WORLD'S LARGEST COLLECTION OF AMERICAN ILLUSTRATION ART
SIGNATURE QUALITY MASTERWORK PAINTINGS
LOVE & ROMANCE—THE ART DECO ERA: 1920–1940

EDWARD SAGANOWSKI (1889 - 1976)

Oil on Canvas, 30 x 24. Signed lower left. Circa 1930.

DEAN CORBEE (1892-1960)

Oil on Canvas, 40 x 30. Signed & dated lower left. Circa 1931.

HENRY RALSTON (1888-1944)

Oil on Panel or Paper, 40 x 30. Signed & dated lower right. Circa 1933.

CHARLES E. CHAMBERS (1887 - 1961)

Oil on Canvas, 30 x 24. Signed lower right. Circa 1930.

Thousands of important paintings by America's great illustrators which were collectors' acquisitions during the last century are available for sale in qualified houses. SPECIAL ATTENTION IS GIVEN TO TOPICAL SUBJECTS IN ANY SUBJECT MATTER, THEME, PERIOD, GENRE, OR ARTIST. IN 2014 CENARTY AMERICAN SALES REACHED $67.5 MILLION. SEE LISTED. NO ONLINE LEADERSHIP PROVIDED.

ORIGINAL PAINTINGS PUBLISHED AS MAGAZINE ILLUSTRATIONS
THE WORLD'S BEST PRIME SUBJECTS AND SIGNATURE IMAGES
LOVE & ROMANCE—THE BABY BOOMER ERA: 1940-1960

卷之三十一

©National Institute for Child Health and Human Development

TRANSLATION © 2000 - LINDA

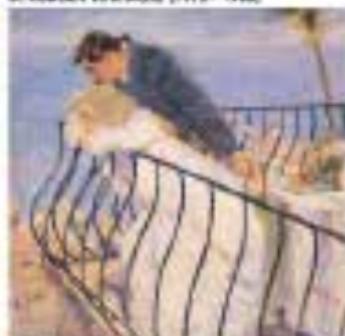

Dr. M. V. Jones, M.D., with Special Notes by Dr. J. H. and Dr. J. W. C. Compton, Boston, Mass.

第十一章 人物 · 1000 — 1200

© 2008 Pearson Education, Inc.

ISSN 1062-1024 • 1000

第二部分：数据挖掘与知识发现

CHARLES G. MARTINETTE

PC-SCB295 Holloman, Daniel J., Thomas, Michael J., and others. A new method for the detection of low-priority sites of high priority interest using a modified version of the Benthic Index of Biotic Integrity. Environ Monit Assess 1998; 53: 191-200.

FAMOUS AND IMPORTANT M

PUBLISHED BY THE SATURDAY

ROBERT C. RAILTON (1895 - 1971)

Oliver Twist, 1937. Signed lower right, Eliza H.M.
Appleton, Doran, New York. Drawing Plus Photo, May 1, 1937.

ADOLPH W. HARBERS (1881 - 1970)

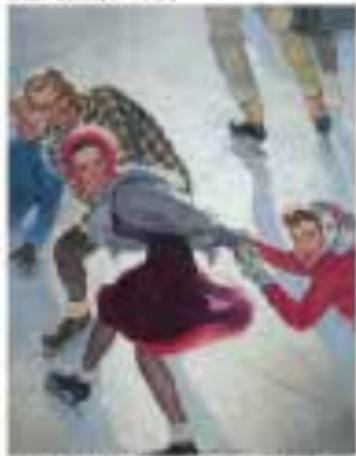

Oliver Twist, 1937. Signed lower right, Eliza H.M.
Appleton, Doran, New York. Drawing Plus Photo, May 1, 1937.

JACK N. ROOKS (1897 - 1970)

Cards in Boxes, 1937. Signed lower right, Eliza H.M.
Appleton, Doran, New York. Drawing Plus Photo, May 1, 1937.

KENNY SLAUGHTER (1917 - 1990)

Cards in Boxes, 1937. Signed lower right, Eliza H.M.
Appleton, Doran, New York. Drawing Plus Photo, May 1, 1937.

All paintings (see Boxes) from projects where reproduced in the book Classic of the Saturday Evening Post by Lee Cohen, 1949. Viking Press, N.Y. © The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

Reprints of original paintings by American great illustrators which were originally composed during the last forty years now for sale to qualified buyers. SPECIAL ATTENTION IS GIVEN TO YOUR INDIVIDUAL REQUIREMENTS. SUBJECT MATTER, THEME, PERIOD, NUMBER, OR ABSTRACT IN 2001 CONVENTION AMERICAN GULF MARATHON ART SHOW. SHOULD INQUIRIES BE RECEIVED, PLEASE CALL (713) 469-3333.

MAGAZINE COVER PAINTINGS EVENING POST: 1925 - 1962

Rare Masterwork Images and Prime Quality Subjects by Norman Rockwell's Best Friends & Closest Peers. These Paintings Visually and Artistically Captured the Daily Life and Social Morals of 20th Century America.

CHARLES E. MARTINETTE (1913 - 1998)

Opposite page front, 20 x 14, Signed, Lower left, Circa 1953.
Reproduced from Cover, Saturday Evening Post, March 20, 1953.

CHARLES L. MURKIN (1907 - 1998)

Opposite page front, 20 x 14, Signed, Lower right, Circa 1957.
Reproduced from Cover, Saturday Evening Post, February 10, 1957.

FRANKLIN SHELBY (1914 - 1999)

Opposite page back, 20 x 14, Signed, Lower left, Circa 1952.
Reproduced from Cover, Saturday Evening Post, April 14, 1952.

CHARLES M. MAZANOW (1908 - 1987)

Opposite page front, 20 x 14, Signed, Lower left, Circa 1962.
Reproduced from Cover, Saturday Evening Post, April 14, 1962.

CHARLES G. MARTINETTE

PO Box 294 Hollywood Beach, Florida 33019 USA tel: (305) 456-1252 email: CharlesGMartinette@aol.com
Author of the classic American Picture book series Charles E. Martinette (1953-1957) & Charles L. Murkin (1957-1962).
Author of the original Charles G. Martinette book series (1994-1998) ISBN 1-888843-01-0
Author of the original Franklin Shelby book series (1994-1998) ISBN 1-888843-02-8

PORTRAIT ARTIST TO THE PRESIDENTS

In 1962, Berney was commissioned to paint the portrait of President John F. Kennedy. On move-in day at the White House in October, he met with JFK in preparation for the permanent portrait waiting his turn. Berney later discovered that he had showed up in the wrong wing of the Cabinet Room, which at that point was off-limits to the public. Despite the results being elsewhere in the White House, Kennedy met with Berney later on the day. Berney was ushered into the Oval Office where he was introduced to the President. The people making the introductions explained that Kennedy had seen all sorts of portraits, and Kennedy responded, "You may be doing many more uncomplicated ones." Berney visited at Kennedy's desk, where at age 43 was already President of the United States, and had the usual same questions, but decided to hold his tongue.

Berney remembered Kennedy as a handsome, dynamic, energetic man who asked a lot of questions. At one point, McGovern-Burke brought in an easel-mounted life-size cutout of Kennedy walking at his desk. The life-size portrait would provide a statistic for small businesses, and Kennedy told Berney "that his full portfolio didn't come good." Thus, JFK suggested that they adjourn to the Blue Garden where Justice Kennedy had made several drawings of portraits of Kennedy walking in the Rose Garden for future reference. When the portrait was completed and presented at the White House, Kennedy was delighted and said, "Take this up to justice immediately. She'll want to see it." (He also gave him a key to the painting.) The right of Berney's style served as a perfect complement to the vitality of the Kennedy presence. Berney's portrait now sits half-way around the world as part of a U.S. Embassies touring exhibition. In Russia, Mrs. Kennedy was particularly struck by the portrait and commented to it "The physical sense of the permanent collection of the Kennedy Library."

A year later, Kennedy was assassinated. Like so many others at the time, Berney was heartbroken by the country's loss. He recalled the photographs he had taken of JFK walking in the Rose Garden and so determined to do a picture of the man who had impressed him so much. Later that weekend, Berney received a phone call that the John Hancock Insurance Company wanted an illustration to accompany a memorial tribute to the late president. Berney gave them the drawing of Kennedy walking with his hands in his pockets—an image which soon became iconic. Later, Berney's art was widely reproduced and featured on Kennedy items. Berney was immediately called upon to paint JFK a third time for the book he had illustrated, Kennedy's top auto and speechwriter. The book was published in Look Magazine.

In 1966, Jackie Kennedy's children decided to auction off her personal possessions at Sotheby's. Among her cherished mementos were three of Berney's portraits of her husband. The auction house estimated the value of these prints at $200 or $300, but as the time the bidding had ended, they brought $25,000. Andy Rooney of 60 Minutes (who also wrote a post on one of Berney's portraits of JFK, a gift from Berney's friend Harry Rosenthal) reported that a reporter was at Sotheby's during the bidding process, at which he found "good fun" of the overpriced bonanza and overpriced art that held up Berney's portrait of Kennedy and said, "There's something I love that Aristotle Onassis couldn't have bought from me and all the money he ever had...this picture of JFK ought to be by my friend Harry Rosenthal."

Shortly after the new president took office, Berney was summoned back to the White House to paint a portrait of Lyndon Johnson. Berney was meeting former Kennedy aide Pierre Salinger and LBJ's new aide, Jack Valenti. Salinger had a smile, as if he had stopped smiling since Kennedy was killed. Valenti found that the whole atmosphere of the White House had changed, and Johnson was a moving subject for a portrait. Unlike Kennedy, he was somber and pensive. When the final portrait was delivered, behavioral analyst Edward (Lucky) Lewellen would become famous for calling portraits of LBJ "Hail! Hail! That fat prezzy of LBJ" was the slogan (long LBJ had never been). In many places could be considered high praise by comparison. After LBJ left the states, Jack Valenti showed up to make apologies for the president's manner, using "that's not me." Later, Berney found that LBJ was really just the poorest dressed LBJ painting he's ever seen in his art pocket because LBJ did not wear the public to know that he was gay. Doing that portrait, along with his return by Berney, made it the permanent collection of the National Portrait Gallery in Washington, D.C.

Back in part upon the success of the Kennedy portrait, Berney was later called upon to create portraits of Presidents Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter, and Ronald Reagan. But LBJ remained his favorite.

Caricature of Presidents LBJ, R.F.K., and G.W.B.

A portrait of Pablo Casals, painted by Georges Braque, 1911

THE MOST MEMORABLE PIANIST

Braque's still-life painter was regrettably deceased, so he had the opportunity to portray many famous and colorful people from his era. These included political figures (such as Martin Luther King, Queen Elizabeth, Lili Elzeth, Hoover, and Truman), writers (such as Fitzgerald and Al Capone), Stephen Arnold Dillman, and Eugene Ionesco; artists (such as Bing Crosby, Katherine Hepburn, Clark Gable, and Susan Connery); television personalities (such as Johnny Carson, Carol Burnett, and Don Rickles); and leaders of the arts and letters (such as Pablo Casals, Tennessee Williams, Joseph Campbell, Arthur C. Clarke, and Stan Van der Post). Some of Braque's portraits appeared regularly on television (Carol Burnett, Dean Martin, and Jack Palance) after appearing in the cover of TV Guide, and some appeared in The New Yorker. The "cover-section" of the magazine never failed to attract a different notable person. Braque provided the perfect settings for the action-oriented stars.

Throughout his comic biography work asserted that Braque could just manage with a regular cascade of well-known and interesting people. The young man from O'Fallon who could not keep a job stacking boxes at Bob Hope's puppers inc., however, will forever stand himself alone, with Bob Hope at attorney MacArthur's residence or a pedestal in memory of him for the rest of a national magazine.

Braque especially remembered his working with Pablo Casals, the world famous artist. Braque was in Paris for working on an editorial assignment and asked to meet with the violinist. The famous Basque audience told him it would be impossible; the master was 90 and frail. He had been in seclusion in his villa since some ongoing eye surgery, like neurosurgeon with sciatica. But wind reached Casals and the very next day the phone rang at Braque's hotel room. If he could be ready in 15 minutes, the maestro would make an exception. Braque was down in Casals' villa where he presented himself and his audience with adored Braque in an even Casals. After a brief talk, Casals sat down at his piano and, effervescent at the visitors, played for Braque the entire solo piano piece by a pianist, Gershwin, looked up and said, "I'll bet this is the first time you've heard a thirty centura played by a 90 year old man!" Casals probably picked up the piano and decided to attempt to play the solo. Started, Casals' wife whispered to Braque, "We've been trying to get the courage to play the piano since his operation, but this is the first time he has been willing to pick it up."

He began to Casals play on bravely. Braque commented his admiration and to have a musician and was deeply touched. When Casals finished, Braque thanked him for his contribution or music. The maestro suggested Braque and started 8-01.

When he returned to Liverpool, Braque painted a portrait of the master by the window. The painting turned a gold comb from the Society of Musicians and became one of Braque's favorite portraits.

An illustration of David holding an umbrella.

SPORTS ILLUSTRATION

Beginning in the early 1980s, Bowers also developed a specialty in sports illustrations. His focus is on perspective and use of light, instead of rhythm, the subject of sports is a particularly effective way.

In an article for Washington Artist Magazine titled "Art of Sports," David Meltzer commented on how, over time, the artist David started receiving critical pressure from those glorifying the sales of clay amphoras, human figures, and sculptures. He has presented a special challenge for artistic interpretation. David discussed his approach of Bowers' work in this tradition: "Bowers' Tech" (sic) paintings may look postage-stamped but they are remarkable flashes of bright color or wisps of texture, describing something like the sun Wright uses Gaudi to paint his gaudiness in a kind of environment in which the artwork is so dominant that the person himself is only part of the artwork."

Bowers would go to an audience long before he got past the eighth inning, standing behind a set of a plexiglass barrier, to teach baseball great Sandy Koufax about a half-dozen of them and had Sandy star Goose Henson sign a print. He was just so he could capture their movement at its x-pause. Sometimes getting the right image required special accommodations. Following pitcher Tom Glavine's accident at the Atlanta International, Bowers had a difficult time fighting his way through the crowd of fans and reporters that day to consult Glavine. It simply impossible to get the picture he wanted. This he realized that Mrs. Neklaus, who had followed her husband the disease and watched him through many difficult tournaments, reading some distance from the crowd on a nearby hill. It turned out that during his hard times experiencing exactly where to stand to get an unimpeded view of his husband. From that place Mr. Bowers followed Mrs. Neklaus after that his husband and always get the picture he wanted.

Bowers has had a long, successful career, illustrating major sports events around the world, from the Indianapolis 500 to the running of the bulls at Pamplona. He has earned "Sports Artist of the Year" in 2001 by the United States Sports Academy, but also kindly agrees to come to the Bay Area to have the most successful specializations of illustrated half of the 20th century, are not for his work in Sports Illustration (and his numerous important commissions, prints, and books).

OUR SIXTH YEAR

Windy City Pulp and Paperback Convention

WINDY CITY COMICS
Illustration Magazine
1000 2nd Avenue
St. Louis MO 63101
(314) 567-1000

May 3-5 2008
Opening 2 PM Fri.
8 AM Sat. & Sun.

WYNHAM D'ARTE
6010 N Mannheim Rd.
ROSEMONT, IL 60018
Hotel at 847-297-1254

Buster Books
Art Show Activities
Pantries
Panel Discussions and much more!

Come Celebrate the 75th Anniversary of THE

The Shadow

Illustrations by Harryhausen Inc.

Windy City Pulp and Paperback Con
1000 Second Ave
St. Louis MO 63101
(314) 567-1000
www.wcpc.com
wcpc@comcast.net

ERERY RAYMOND KINSTLER

The Artist's Journey through Pulp Fiction - 1942-1962
in the Visual Arts by Bruce Egan/Kinstler 240 pages, 100 illustrations, like new

Costumes • Pulp Magazines • Paperback Cases • Books • Original Illustrations

PHILADELPHIA

100 Farnsworth St.
10th Floor, Suite 1011
Philadelphia, PA 19102
(215) 545-2747

The Aviator's Biopic
Hardcover Edition - $44.95
Deluxe Slipcased Edition - $95
Limited to 200 copies Signed by Author and with 10,000 photo-like postcards.

Illustrations from Aviator Books available on Amazon.com.

www.wcpc.com
All rights reserved.

Boggs' 1959 drawing for 'Illustration' was widely influential, as seen in the collection of illustrations (opposite).

ILLUSTRATION INFLUENCES

When Boggs's distinctive style first emerged in Denver, he began to attract students. Jim Sanders, who was present at the beginning of Bernia's career, remembered, "There were half a dozen illustrators in Denver who would literally copy Boggs's work; they would trace his figures and then flip the photo over to reverse the image. It made me sick." As Bernia's career gained momentum, other illustrators were struck by his style and tried to copy it. Krenzel recalled, "They would copy Boggs's style, and try to distinguish themselves by adding detail. By contrast, I focused the contours of a scene. Illustrators don't say, 'But those added details always make the picture worse.' Bernia always painted his illustrations with the least amount of detail necessary."

A sense of higher quality would eventually recognize the influence that Bernia was having on these mid-side or minor players to distinguish their role. Illustration Masters' Michael reprinted how Bernia was one of his favorite artists, whom he was giving awards. "When I first came to America," he wrote, "I have my work looked and sought like Bernia's—I began to realize my work."

Other illustrators will later compare their illustrations to those of Bernia as the proxy for a career because a place in the industry. Vincent Giarrano (David Pollock) remembers that one student was all too quick to point Bernia out, writing "Give a teacher the shillin' to assume Bernia taught and painted give him a good slice at the C.A. Illustration award for 1970." Advertising Age magazine took note of the trend to plagiarize Bernia's work, and began a game with its readers to see who could spot the Boggs copies.

Illustration expert Fred Tandler offers an explanation for the sessions Bernia had at the studio back then: "I imagine back then all kinds of cartoon artists—Cartoonists like Charles Daily, Gahan or J.C. Leyendecker"—who were known for their distinctive approach and persona. Sanders said that "although Bernia's work changed considerably after leaving the story-week [he may sound] something he reached, had his personal trademark—the unusual pose, the unusual figures." Ten years later, in the style for American Illustration and at his most iconic, Bernia's Bernia largely ignored his imitators, but Bernia's new spirit, Harvey Kalin, was not nearly as charitable. "Bernie never got me caught up with all the imitators, but I used to get very annoyed. Bernie would call me up and say 'Take Bernia's art off that or that magazine! And I still 'We can't do it!'—that's just Bernie."

Tandler pointed out that none of the many early period signs of establishing his originality—"Everybody wanted to be Bernie Fuchs but nobody pulled it off convincingly." On the plus, Kahn agrees, "Bernie was able to rise above all the imitation because his designs were based on a technique that could be copied. It was a technique—it comes from his soul."

mitch@graphiccollectibles.com

- figurines • illustrations
- ceramics • limited editions
- story illustrations
- figurative art
- abstract art
- fine art

and what else made by the many talented artists that we've tried to express

Graphic

COLLECTIBLES

www.graphiccollectibles.com

Mitch Gaskins Art Studio
2000 S. Highland, Salt Lake City, UT 84116

Call or write for free catalogues and price lists.

SPECIALIZING IN REGIONAL AND LUXURIOUS AMERICAN ILLUSTRATION AND
FROM A DIVERSE ARRAY OF SOURCES: THE 20TH - 21ST CENTURY

The stockyards at the Indianapolis 500 (Detail) of Maurice Prendergast's series, 1907

ILLUSTRATION AND PHOTOGRAPHY

Maurice Prendergast wrote about his frustration the day that other illustrators informed he was secretly using photography in certain paintings: "As a member of the Society of S. Illustrators, William Glavin, a fellow illustrator, probably you are and will be too. 'I know you are going over to the enemy,' 'Heads!' I said, looking ignorant because I realized right away what he was referring to and was ashamed of it. 'Please save your photographs; be still and enough! You... well, you know... are awfully I'm afraid.' 'You can't,' he said. 'We'll calculate. Getting trapped,' 'I am,' 'I think,' he said. 'Dear old photographer! And he walked away."

In his book Illustration, illustrators were encouraged in a great novel struggle over whether to use photographs in art with painting. Writers noted that the reason such Titian, Leonardo, and Dürer had refrained from photographs decades before, Blumert, perceptively, in the interview, had to be prouder than pure. Yet, the practical advantages of photography were undeniable and always conceivable. Prendergast recalled the time that he took the camera back and caused him to start using photographs despite the norms of his peers: "One day Harry Chase, the art director of Illustration Magazine, called me and Russell's Masses—Grosvenor, and said to me, 'Norman, it's always better to through the machine and you get instantaneous photos of things!' "Then," I said, "I began to think it up," said Mr. O'Keeffe. "It's instantaneous. You never have angles, never who goes, positions... Use photographs!"

In truth, illustrators had been inclined to competition with photographers for decades. By the time Prendergast was ready to retire, photography had largely usurped the commanding position of the illustrators commercially, but the norms of the industry were still being tested out. The new generation of illustrators made their peace with photography as a reference tool. Albrecht Dürer and others were legendary for their valiant attempts to associate this with photographs—clipped from magazines and books to help with accuracy. Some illustrators remained steadfastly uncomfortable with the medium. Others dismissed photographers in public but used them behind closed doors.

In 1956, the world last turned its back when the Art Directors was visited by an illustrator from Cooper Studios, probably the humor New York master at that time. He watched Burns and the others work and was astonished by their old fashioned painting technique. The Art Directors, he said, was hopelessly out of date. All of the artists at Cooper Studios—artists such as Lee Krasner, Jim Dine, and Andy Warhol—were not just using photographs, but using projectors as well to speed the drawing process and reenactments. He pointed to a self-portrait done by Burns with several squares and said: "I can tell which of these figures you painted from reference photos and which you made up in your head. If I can tell the difference, the clients in New York can tell too. It makes one want to do things the way you're doing it. You'll never be able to keep up with the competition."

Using photography didn't necessarily result in a "photographic" illustration. Blumert, who made use of photographs would sometimes produce for his clients more impressionistic, or abstract results that painters who painted from models.

CREATIONS

RECOLLECTIONS

RECREATIONS

KEN STEACEY PUBLISHING

www.ijerph.org

Books of creative illustration and collectibles, published on-demand!

Advertising illustration, James N. Thompson gold record winner, 1980.

Illustrators, photography usurped many of the remains of the old model for illustrations. Replacing illustrations with photography was the wave of the year in the mid-1980s: a wider range of clients and a flatter rate around $100 per print to publishers, at a lower cost. When Time was shifting its pages, it would sometimes commission twice or three covers for the same issue and retain the best one. With the advancement of photography, this could change from a host of alternatives almost instantly and, if desired, become one of the choices, enabling a digital image using Photoshop.

Berne found himself battling with photographers for assignments. Berne was assigned by Sports Illustrated to paint an important cover story on "The men that won the Masters tournament," which required Berne to go to the Masters and observe the leading players firsthand. When he arrived at the Masters, he discovered that the division of photography for sports (Richard George Blodgett), insisted the fact that an illustrator had received a photo assignment that should have gone to a photographer. Blodgett confronted Berne, saying, "We have ordered to compete with you, but that should have been a photographic assignment and I fight for my photographs. I'll let you see your art piece in the tournament, but don't think you are going to get inside that report [or are the article show up?]. Developed and for photographs like that it may could spoil Berne's illustrations, the cover might still go in a photograph. Specifically, Berne called Blodgett up and informed, trying to find someone to support him and get him the across-the-table. None of his contacts could be located in time for the results, so Berne set his own arrangement for the top of the week the photographs went the cover. He found ways in sessions all the identifiers thrown in his prints by the photographers, and his paintings ultimately gained the cover of the magazine.

Despite this, and some issues with photographers, Berne never left illustration for the camera, and he kept adapting photographic assignments to use his skills as a painter. His philosophy was, "it doesn't really matter what he is assigning it, close by the camera by the camera. The point is, it is still story illustrated right?" Robert Haider watched Berne incorporate photography into his work, and said, "Berne started with his models still life, in addition he was bright enough to probably a camera forward and continue his experiments." This meant moving the camera to capture angle, light and composition with an artist's eye almost as an extension of his paintbrush.

Dick Maurice recalled that once after Berne painted at the New-York studio, he needed seven photographs for a television documentary segment which was to run on another occasion. He said that "to be safe, I took about 15 pictures. After they were developed, there is some through them逐一and described 17 of them. He finally maneuvered out of the whole batch that he graciously and would be appropriate. After that, I let him take his own photographs." Trisha Gurnea praised Berne's use of the camera from the approach of many other illustrators, saying, "Berne used the camera as a tool rather than as a threat."

Today, Berne would demonstrate that his other media does not preclude photographic and illustrations when he was assigned an illustration and decided that the best illustration would be a photograph. The magazine agreed, and the resulting photograph by Borchert was published in place of a painting.

Ballerina in White, 1988.

BERRIE BOCHERT, FILMMAKER

In the 1980s, television began having "talented" art directors and cinematographers enter Emmy award contests. TV was an exciting new medium with a broad audience opposite the arts, and it was surprising that this didn't lead to more art awards. Borchert was approached by Sally Disney who was at that time the producer at Disney Productions, Inc., an international film company. Disney Productions had already commissioned the late T. C. Walker, Thomas a'Keeley, Borchert recalled. "Berrie was brilliant... he consistently selected strong colors with a sense of also of composition. So I asked him to direct the camerawork for the first The Lion King commercial. He had never directed a commercial before, but when he did, it was beautiful. Berrie did three pictures and all of the colors were kind of off-key, off-color. His color ability knew exactly what was needed."

Borchert found himself "working on Bambi for his advice on a wide range of items." While I was working, I used to have him here with me. I would ask him what he thought about a particular script and he would say, 'If I were you I'd just take care-way over to the side. It had a narrow window which let in a lot of early morning light.'

In the late 1980s, Borchert had a chance to revisit filmmaking. He was at the very peak of the illustration field, but after 18 very intense and public years at the top of his profession, he was facing the kinds of challenges. He had worked on comic books, storybooks, postcards, and all varieties of visual media. He had developed a strong and loyal client base but he also recalled, "The illustration business was still buying the hell out of me. I am again exposed working on the project that I was going." He decided to try his skills in the film industry.

Said that same time, film director David Superville was running a production company that made television and commercials. At a weekend retreat for the Art Directors Club, Superville met Borchert and talked about the movie business. Superville recalled that he was doing a short about Buller, and gave a cartoon by each of these famous illustrators—Berrie Borchert, Atlantic Taghie, and Borchert, as we then called them. Superville said, "I'm impressed enough that Prange and English did not seem terribly outclassed by them, but Borchert was different. According to Superville, "Borchert had a way of looking at the world that I knew would translate well into movies. His life inspired his art paintings."

80 Berthe Morisot, 1876. Image courtesy of Dick P. Gottlieb Collection, Boston

After long, Berne had largely abandoned the trial of litigation to concentrate on filmmaking. Autre Temps, a memoir to his family of Illustration, suggested that one reason Berne had turned to filmmaking was to find fresh air away from the Berlin Taube emigrants who had sprung up everywhere: "Berne Taube is doing his damned best to find Taube or Berne or to find an entire equal who also thinks like a Taube."

Berne worked on screenplays and helped film his supervisor, who said, "Berne made some stirring, beautiful films." He was in charge of the production design, the location, and all the graphics in addition to the camera work. He also applied his natural talents to his own field and his particular interest and gifts. Supervisor reported that Berne received awards from the Int. Directors Club for a contribution to Mauskater-Denk, that later overshadowed Die Geige & das Maedchen which was the agency that handled Mauskater-Denk's advertising. There was a huge anti-interest in the agency when they and Berne's supervisor, Berne's work represented a distinct break from the previous approach and people were cheering, as each other were in. It was in this way they wouldn't argue with the way it looked..."

In addition to his eyes, his sense of color, and his ability to compose, Berne brought his sense of experimentation to his filmmaking craft. He loved the wide angle lens and variety of effects. Supervisor recalled that anyone who chose Berne to direct a film would have to accept that Berne would interpret the story and bring himself into the picture. Supervisor emphasized, "Berne doesn't do anything half-assed!"

Berne also conducted educational film cycles such as Ravel's Suite and the Land of Oklahoma. For the French film Les Rives Bleues set down in Purys Bay where his son named a Schleicher for a wild vintage of Berne's plant. In one shot, Berne swapped his shirt over the landing pad of the bathtubs with the crew members as it inverted above the plane. However, he did not anticipate that when his camera inverted across the plane, it would create the sensation of falling from the helicopter. Berne became dizzy and nearly passed out, but was helped to digress both the helicopter and the camera.

While Berne enjoyed his work on film, he ultimately decided that it was not what he was looking for. Berne recalled, "Berne could have easily gone into filmmaking but it just wasn't as satisfying the way as painting. Besides, he was making too damn much money in an industry." Although Berne could not persuade Berne to become an filmmaker, the process did not close Berne and Berne continued with his art again in the 1980s when Berne was living in Italy. Berne recalled, "Berne's eyes went above 1990. He was always looking at everything under the sun, everything he could possibly see."

TURNING TO OIL PAINT

As Berne returned to Illustration, he was looking for a new direction. Once again, he had experimented with a variety of scenic media, including comic panels, ink, and acrylic. But his next major phase, and the one that would last longer than all the others mentioned, was oil paint. Oil remains Berne's preferred medium today. But his techniques for painting are still disrupted due to his dementia.

Berne went to England on assignment for the magazine Lubavitcher and began to paint the memory of English past. He started out experimenting with acrylic on surfaces such as corrugated cardboard. In his search to capture the author's style of a mug of ale with matching patterning throughout, he tried to paint it in oil. Disappointed with the result, he tried to upscale the paint job with a rag. The rag did not catch hold and the paint splattered off the surface. Berne had been painting for Feuerbach day in, he became more and more inspired by the potential for oil color. Today, he paints exclusively in oil, often applying color to the surface and then rubbing, or fling, or scratching it out or softening it in.

American Art Archives
...explore
...contribute
...enjoy
www.americanartarchives.com

THE HALL OF NAME

In 1975, when Berner was 63, he was elected to the Society of Illustrators Hall of Fame. He was contacted by Harold von Schmidt, one of the classic old-time illustrators who knew and had worked with some of the greatest illustrators of the century. Von Schmidt thought that, despite Berner's unassuming profile, it was time for the profession to acknowledge the quality of his work and the scope of his contribution to the field of illustration.

The year Berner was inducted he was one of three honorees. As an indication of the high regard that his colleagues had for Berner, his other two illustrations were Edward Pyle, the father of American illustration, and Maxfield Parrish, a legendary painter and one of the most popular illustrators of the 20th century. It was around this time that Marlene Rogers, president of the Society of Illustrators, wrote: "When I was a child, there was always a 'Giant in the Land' Sunday dinner客串大厨 a my dad ate it at Pilsbury's [cafeteria]."

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

As the market for magazine illustrations began to subside, Berner was concentrated more time to children's books. One book was a series of books published by Reader's Digest. The magazine had long published a series of condensed, hardbound books illustrated by some of the best that at removal of the day, including Jessie Willcox Smith, Louis Schreyer, and Maxfield Parrish. These illustrations were generally done in ink work with watercolor. Berner was approached by Reader's Digest in the 1950s to do a new set of illustrations. Each entry contained about six or seven drawings and they were due to roll.

A few years later, Berner was contacted by the Franklin Library, which was publishing a series of classic books on quilt to blockade. Berner was consulted with the text and art director to come up with the sources that he would illustrate. He illustrated seven or eight books, but favorite being A Farewell to Arms by Ernest Hemingway. His illustrations, Berner says, were happy with the quality of the reproduction. The publisher wanted to spend a great deal of money on fancy bindings, but not enough on the reproduction of the illustrations made.

Then, in 1958, Berner was contacted by Leslie Stevens about illustrating a new children's book. Berner was not involved in the visual arts because that was first book, Ragtime Empire, was to be about the great Memphis Palace, which had given up over East St. Louis not far from Berner's house. He agreed to do the book and it turned into a great success. It became an American Library Association Notable Book and a Booklist editor's choice. Next, he was asked to do a book about Sports Figures. The third book was titled Carolina Gator. After that, Berner illustrated Shooting for the Moon. This became a lot of fun for Berner.

Illustration from Giant in the Land.

After illustrating eight books, Berner decided to try his hand at writing as well. While doing research for a book about wolves, Berner read that one of the major difficulties young Perry Espinosa sales was that wolf prints could scare them as they rode off alone in the wilderness. Berner had been doing paintings of that old West for Jack O'Connel Galleries and imagined they had re-enactments with a Perry Espinosa theme, so he painted a close-up of a pack of wolves, on a ridge looking down on a small family riding across in the moonlight. He submitted it to the gallery, but it wasn't at all the focus image of a Perry Espinosa sales they were hoping for. Berner recalled, "They sent it back and it ended up lying on the studio floor for a couple of years. I located further into Perry Espinosa how and came up with an outline of a children's adventure story. I did a few water paintings and eventually wrote the story around the painting." The publisher tried to explain that Berner was doing the book in the writing mode, that the story should mainly be influenced by the pictures, but Berner said, "Not for me." In 2011, Wide Like the Wind: A Tale of the Perry Espinosa came out and was quite successful.

The faculty of the Illustration Workshop in 1982 (left to right): John Brumley, Mark English, Bruce Bechtel, Michael DeGrazie, Bill Peat.

HOME TO YOUNG ILLUSTRATORS

Bruce's career began the day he arrived from immigrating the wet. He has lived here by grace along the coast for most of his life. He has been associated regularly by younger illustrators and artists, most of whom make a pilgrimage to Newport to get helpful tips about their work and about the profession.

Bruce's first serious job as an art director came when he was invited to join the faculty of the Farmland Art School. The prominent illustrators of the '60s came together under the leadership of Elmer Bierne to run the school, which was originally very successful. But, by the 1970s, the faculty recognized that the face of illustration had changed, and that students were looking for a more contemporary look. Elmer Bierne asked Bruce as the young illustrator they needed most. Bruce was approached by his close friend Austin Briggs to join the faculty of the Farmland Art School, and he did so. In 1971, the Farmland Art School put out a call for applications for its correspondence with concentrations by Bruce, Jackie, Bob Pytl, and others. Despite their efforts, the school was well out of business as bad management forced the business to shut down after just nine illustrations in the posed. Some illustrators took their work out of the school, while others left on until the end and later had careers anyway.

In 1972, Bruce found teaching again when he and his colleague, Mark English, combined forces to create the Illustration Workshop. The Illustration Workshop consisted of fifteen students of the U.S. and Europe to teach a small group of aspiring illustrators. The idea for a workshop originated with the Art Center School in Los Angeles, which asked alumnae Mark English to conduct a workshop for its students in 1971. English invited a group of ten friends—a collection of the most promising new illustrators—and the Illustration Workshop was born.

The workshop was managed by Michael Daniels, for the first few years, but during Mark DeGrazie's input in it, the workshop expanded and expanded the program in 1979. The scope of the workshops expanded to encompass fine art painters and oil calligraphers, and to cover a broad array of subjects. Students were learning with certainty about whom the best illustrators were working, whom the best illustration schools were doing, whom the best companies were to work for, what the best methods were.

The workshops prospered for 15 years, and the group disbursed workshops around the country and in Europe—down to an offshoot in Spain. DeGrazie recalled, "the first three great huge students, and all the ones in our other workshops around the country." Many other illustrators were drawn to the program and participated as guests or visiting lecturers, including names such as Seymour Chwast at the Paula Fox Studios. The Workshop was not limited to one style of illustration; "everyone was free to do whatever they wanted more than practice to share art." However, that one-dimensional approach ended. DeGrazie recalled that some of the students thought, "Geez, don't you realize the different interest in the business side of running a workshop?" Workshops were complete chaos, although mostly happy chaos, he said. The illustrators were a business manager's nightmare in spite of running an expense report for their results on time. DEGW would review its members and, if any drawings or sketches of envelopes and pieces of scrap paper ended after a workshop had ended, DeGrazie and "two working with highly individual expressionism, none of whom had ever learned to draw. Each one was accustomed to being the one. Each was convinced that he or she better than the rest in the class. Often one of my jobs was to keep them apart." Each year at the end of the workshop, the illustrators would vote that they were quitting the program. They returned to one of the presents from a workshop—the illustration or book tests for the lesson. Instead, they decided as all of the projects among themselves had returned home every year. No matter how much they tried, most of them had not won second or even third place. DeGrazie said that this did not stop the next year because, the following year all the illustrators would return. Farmland-based DeGrazie, "I don't know what kept them coming back. It was a very fragile resource for the workshop."

The students in the workshop differed dramatically depending on the personality of the illustrators. Bill Peat and Alan Cohen were struggled by having trouble in their communities...While Racine always looked for something encouraging to tell them about their artwork, DeGroot recalled, "it always meant something special to a student which they could have knowing that the great Renato Guttuso said something was along their perspective." The students came from all walks of life. Those who participated in the classes soon learned that they often surprised one another. In one occasion, Bill Peck explained to the students that whenever when one illustration was not going well, it made more sense just to walk down the board and start over again. At the point, a lovely young blonde student volunteered that she accomplished this by taking her picture out, the sheet with her. All programs stopped or otherwise tried to encourage this practice.

But there were negative moments too, as young illustrators struggled to master. Guttuso remembers, a young student kept on drawing over her thumbnail or keep up. Her unhappy mom brought a law suit that Peck says, and then in response to that, the entire class once again, grouped in a huddle while Bob, Renato, and the young student left the room to review their masterpiece. On another occasion, Renato and Mark English organized a class based upon a workshop he had run of the students sitting on the couch, was from his hand. He was asked, whether he what he had done, for didn't know what he was going to do for a career. The two instructors sat down and had a long conversation with him, trying to elicit that from and point out the possibilities of careers. It was no use. The disappointed young man walked away, exasperated. But the young student who felt depressed, there were others who grew from the experience. One student who diagnosed severe pain in a lung turned out to do the most fine and imaginative illustrations out of anyone else.

By 1981, the illustrator concluded that they had all had enough and stopped doing the workshops. When it became clear that the filmmakers would not be back, DeGroot wrote a poem issuing the call:

The children's artist, all of them great,

For packed this Workshop, and this artful art form;
None such felt he was better than all of the best,
And one simply wrote, A lot of the best!

The workshop did consider for the man who came
And learned about playing the illustration game.
From those who were already at the top of the class
Half the dreams open, their own a plan to be set.

Renato says that he finally quit teaching when he ran out of money for students asking how they could make living from illustrations. "When I was an illustrator, I was always working on a small scale, illustrating for magazines. By 1981, the schools were just about gone. People had no place to express their art or nothing because, and I couldn't continue them just thinking that they were going to do a marketing long-term career in this field."

Wow-Art • Wow-Art • Wow-Art

MEMORABLE FANTASY, SCIENCE FICTION AND EXCITING GENRE ILLUSTRATIVE ART

WORLDS OF WONDER—P.O. BOX 814, MCLEAN VA. 22101

TEL: 703-867-4253 FAX: 703-790-0519 EMAIL: WOWART@WOW-ART.COM

40 PAGE FULL-COLOR CATALOG AVAILABLE FOR $15.00—$25 INT'L.

VISIT US ON THE WEB: WWW.WOW-ART.COM

WORKING UNDER FIRE
BY BRUCE MORELAND

FROM MARLERS TO POSTAGE STAMPS

Once the nation's art students, Moreland's career has been a solution to his artistic problem: both large and small. In the 1960s, he was commissioned by Royal Caribbean Cruises to paint a series of murals for its ships. The Royal Caribbean vessels measured up to 22 feet on height.

Painting murals is a very specialized art form—and the great Moreland who became famous for his painting murals—Bruce Moreland, H.C. Wendl, and Alan Gersonf—trained long and hard for this specialty. At first, this training, Moreland remembers, might have been a blessing and a curse because there is an internally consistent way. Some were more successful than the others, but as Moreland got the break, his mural of Christopher Columbus was awarded a medal by the Society of Illustrators.

In the upstairs part of the art apartment, Moreland also designed and illustrated U.S. postage stamps, the smallest assignments he had ever handled. He was commissioned by the U.S. Postal Service to design stamps in association with the Cleopatra Stone illustrations, such as Study English and Fish Print, demonstrated a special aptitude for stamping attempts, but ultimately Moreland found stamps are everlasting. He didn't think that the space provided was the invention he needed for his art, so he didn't pursue commercial work for the Postal Service.

LIMITED EDITION PRINTS

At the market for illustrations and limited-edition illustrations—what's called "print" market, where you do limited edition reproductions, often signed by the artist, were sold directly to the public. This market for artwork became popular with

THE WATERCOLORIST
BY BRUCE MORELAND

WANTED by private collector

ORIGINAL MOVIE POSTER ART
(from sketches to final art)

By:

William Aenard
Tom Lyle
Geo. Peck
Rudger Koenig
John Wayne
Don Shores
John Alvin
Philip Morris
John Seale
Rockwell Brothers

size:

10 x 13"

50 x 60

medium large

extra

Please write to Karina Granberg at squareberg@sqgj.se or call in Russia ++ 32-644-46 10 29

www.GrapefruitMoonGallery.com

Visit GrapefruitMoonGallery.com and check out our 2nd anniversary sale offering discounts of up to 40% on the best in vintage illustration, pin-up, and fine art on sale now.

One of painter Robert Heindel's paintings in his studio, c. 1988

Academy Award and Golden Globe winner Robert Heindel found a worldwide market for prints with a halftone theme. But Heindel's prints became popular with sports fans. His work was illustrating many illustrations of golf, football, and related formats for athletic news publications. Heindel was quite comfortable with some of the assignments he was receiving. He enjoyed being asked, when he kept coming up with new images that were hand-pulled using three or four plates, not to add any graphics above "original edition" prints that were photolithographically produced, and so he added (Barney Kuhn, his agent, to those of other opportunities).

ART GALLERIES

Spurred by illustrations that began to sell their work more widely through the traditional art gallery market, Dick and his colleagues established and maintained a regular gallery. Breuer's work won local appreciation and fame through galleries around the world. His work was exhibited in Japan, England, Canada, and other countries. In the United States, he much to sold at galleries in New York, Chicago, Palm Beach, Denver, Scottsdale, Laguna Beach and San Francisco, among other places. Dick Breuer continues as an illustrator for magazines such as Sports Illustrated and Arizona Highways, art gallerist who made up a huge percentage of his income.

In recent years, Bentez developed special relationships with galleries such as Jack O'Gallagher's gallery in Chicago, which featured a major exhibition of Bentez's paintings in 1995; Giltedge Fine Art, Seattle; Purple, and the Gallerie of Storyville. On several occasions, Bentez had a one-man show at Macthomas at the Glazier's Fine Art gallery.

THE CHANGING FACE OF ILLUSTRATION

Long ago, classic illustrators such as Maxfield Parrish, D.C. Lewinster, and Maxfield Parish had the luxury of relying on royalties the length of their careers, for 30 years or more. When George Bentez was illustrating, he used up the pen, brushwork, and color wash. "Today's editorial people look for the job they know without wanting to have it done before.... It's quite you-dearly to us when we're sending you to sign, think, I want... you're in and I'm off."

When Leyendecker painted a cover for the Saturday Evening Post, he would have his signature first month or so, advancing him ample time to submit models and work on preliminary studies. In the 1970s, Bentez was given just a few days to illustrate an entire story for Esquire Illustrated.

Despite the problems created by the new world of illustration, Bentez maintains great enthusiasm that the new challenges for illustrators were accompanied by new opportunities. "The greatest thing about what's available now is the wide variety of media, variety, say, in the function of the illustrations and the kinds of art that illustrators could be doing, but also in opening up new areas of composition.... There's a whole new language of freedom offered to the artist today.... Maxfield

An illustration from Bentez's series on the American West, from Illustration.

A painting from Beaton's series on the beauties of Elizabeth, New Mexico

A painting from Beaton's series on the beauties of Elizabeth, New Mexico has never been as fast-changing and unpredictable as it is now in the '90s."

This turbulence stimulated some of the long-term growth of the illustration field and opened up opportunity for fresh talent. It is unlikely that Beaton could have risen to the top were it not for his half dozen books written over 20 years earlier during a slower, more stable period in the history of illustrators.

Looking back, Robert Hiltner reflected: "The business of illustration is basically unassessable today. It has been replaced by technology. Computer graphics. Preprocessors. Robert Beaton and I did what we did; it was a different world. We had to make a lot of hard decisions as things changed." He added: "I would say things had worked out pretty well for Beaton and for himself, but that the new generation of artists would have been remissed if they had not made 'Where do kids' reading now today take their interest? I would say there is no answer. There is nothing left for them in the field. They can't follow the path that Beaton and I followed any longer. All you can do is take your best guess. The timing was right and it worked out pretty well for Beaton and me, but it's not a pretty outgoing for those who make the wrong judgments."

With a steady stream of assignments from magazines and books, illustrators have had to find new opportunities further from the Beaton path. Sometimes they have had to move closer to opportunities in order to do just a living. Long gone are the days of the environment society. Although it is clear that Beaton continued to paint profitably until his death six years ago, such is not the case for many other illustrators. In the Society of Illustrators' selection of the best illustrations of the past 20 years, no other illustrator is better has matched that record.

Taylor attributes Berni's long career success to his creativity. "He has gone through many successful phases. If he enjoyed a one-track path, he would be out of business." Besides, Taylor added, "to write it by that success will tell you what you have to live when you do. Berni loves making pictures and telling the story."

Mark Foggia, who lead through many of the changes such Berni added another component. "We were both nervous," he said. "We were always able to figure out something we to do." This is certainly true. On his journey from the early years of 10 issues in New York City, Berni had to become an attorney and adapt to changing circumstances several times. After his desire of being a magazine full-time, he switched and became an artist. When he permanently signed his drawing hand, he adapted and held the pencil a different way. When photography began missing at his professional opportunity, Berni embraced photography and used it to his own advantage. Berni's resilience and tenacity in the face of change are certainly main ingredients in Berni's success.

But there is at least one other element as well. Inspiring Berni's creativity was like having a hot dog in front of a bull. Having a "big" idea—showing his own art exhibition of art by "unknown" art students, Berni became determined that he could do better. While Berni was an acknowledged two original paintings by Eric Raudier, Berni decided that he too should add Roquefort that very next day. What he was a full illustrator in Detroit, he could now eat until he had conquered the New York art market. In short, resilience, tenacity, and commitment with a certain challenge easily inspired him to apply himself harder. That fundamental aspect of Berni's character was underlined by the passage of time and the appearance of successive generations of illustrators; and it helped to keep Berni on top.

PROTECTIVE-MINUTY BOATS

Berni came of age during a period when freelance artists were represented by commissioning agents who worked in a long-term partnership with artists whom they had selected. Berni found two notable representatives, Bill Tice (Illustrating and later Harvey Keltz). Those men had great respect and admiration for the artists they represented. However, after the illustration business went through corrections in the 1960s and 1970s, the old methods of representation began to fall apart. Dwindling markets decreased the ability of clients to pay, while at the same time the industry transformed the distribution chain between artists and their markets. Budgets were smaller, deadlines were shorter, space was more limited, and competitive alternatives to illustrators became plentiful. Illustrators enhanced the ability of clients and even managers to pirate and copy images and make artistic use of them, legally. But never use their image being sold without permission, or without paying royalties.

SO MUCH LIKE REAL PULPS, YOU CAN ALMOST SMELL THEM.

Pulp Replica Editions

Original, facsimile reprints of the entire, fully righted original pages. Many are pictorial books just like the pulps. Over 200 titles, more than 30 different issues! To purchase...
NOT JUST A REPRINT... IT'S A REPLICA.

GIRASOL
REPRODUCTIONS

With over 200 titles, 1400+ issues, 275 facsimiles, 1/2 off! Shipping and handling $10.00. www.girasol.com info@girasol.com

One of Steven Bonsu's most popular and successful illustrations, Bonsu would be among the last to leave as a result of these funds. Still, he says, "I kept growing up as this learned kind of master who was alone in the forest." Bonsu's contributions have certainly buoyed up the careers of individual artists. He convened a meeting of prominent illustrators at his home, where he educated them on illustration systems and brought in a career lawyer to talk with the group.

The idea was bold and innovative. It was also very ahead of its time. A majority of the illustrators found the idea of organizing into a union too daunting. But it started the idea. The movement continued along the lines of the Illustration Studio level...
A long run that Bonsu was present. The problems that surfaced in his union had barely grown, resulting in many difficult challenges for illustrators. Computer imaging and the Internet have transformed the situation. The rise of "rich books," which occasionally reduce illustrations to either graphic artwork, has further tested the possibilities of the illustration field. Seven illustrators have organized to protect their rights, just as Bonsu proposed many years ago. But much time has gone by. In fact, generations of illustrators, artists such as Neal Shusterman and David Liss, have attempted to take a stand for artist rights by forming advocacy groups such as the Illustrators Partnership.

Illustration by Steven Bonsu

BONSU'S IMPACT ON THE FIELD OF ILLUSTRATION

Steven Bonsu is highly regarded as a highly influential artist who especially set the style for others. In many ways he might be considered the evolution of the style of his era. The field of illustration has changed dramatically since Bonsu began painting over 30 years ago. His illustrations are now appearing in media and appearing in spaces that did not even exist when Bonsu started his career. Now it is a global trend to look back and assess the long-term significance of Bonsu's work.

Steven Bonsu, one of the most thoughtful observers of the current illustration scene, has demonstrated that the field of illustration began a period of experimentation and fragmentation in the 1980s that gained momentum in the 1990s and 2000s, leading to what he calls the current "Individualist era and school." At the same time that Bonsu was revolutionizing the career of illustrators, Bonsu's approach to Robert Munsch, Tom Gaze, and Robert Andrew Parker were also pushing out-of-the-box illustrators. Another influential group led by Seymour Chwast and Milton Glaser created their PictureThis!, which combined illustrations with broader principles of design. The "New Illustration" school arose in response to the traditional "Muppet school." Older illustrators became known for print-oriented social critics. Illustrators such as Marshall Arisman, Robert Coover, Edward Gorey, Alan Gerson, and Jim Crotty pushed art to their own discourses. Psychedelic art, underground comic

STREAMLINE ILLUSTRATIONS

DAMES, THUGS AND MAYHEM EXTRAORDINAIRE

SPECIALIZING IN ORIGINAL ART NOIR ILLUSTRATIONS FOR PULPS, PAPERBACKS AND MEN'S ADVENTURE MAGAZINES

BUY • SELL • TRADE

CALL LEO BRERETON AT 530-432-5831

10 AM TO 10 PM PST, 7 DAYS • 10382 DONNA MAY • PEAK VALLEY, CA 95946

Illustration by James M. Johnson based on the sketch of a Monterey-themed road

Illustrations by the Illustrators 1996, L. Ziff style, and graphic novels—drew all broad spectrum audiences. In this assemblage of styles and trends, it is difficult to find a consistent thread that relates most of different illustrations.

However, some observers claim that illustration today has evolved beyond the old Memphis school to a more advanced level, which they label "concept art." Others argue that "the 'new' American Illustration methodology... can be summed up in one word... conceptual. Illustration revised, from what you see to what you get to conceptual because the visual and thematic content in magazines now become more complex, more cerebral.... By the late 1990s photographers' images could represent the nature of change, leaving the depiction of the natural world to illustrators."

In Miller's view, the simple-minded days are long gone, since filled stories of popular magazines no longer sell well. He sees the need for more experimental or "arty" illustrations. He describes such features as "the editorial illustrator's ghosts" and claims that illustrations have now begun to apply "more abstract and symbolic illustrations valuing 'an increased and varied aesthetic value over story.'" Miller suggests that we should seek less relies in "the shadowy, never communicated atmosphere so descriptive of earlier years when style, rather than content, is of concern in products."

It is true that illustrators today are far more likely to be called upon to illustrate scientific, business, professional, and other publications than romance fiction novels or women's magazines.

WE'RE CHANGING! But It's C.R.E. To Look

Illustrators are 20 percent
and upholders,
An artist's An artist's glorious place will be the art, the art competition, competition, and also offered a 20 percent of the work explosion. We can start new opportunities possible. T. G. G. G.
Because of the focus is going to be more, more, more www.illustrators.com
111-111-1111

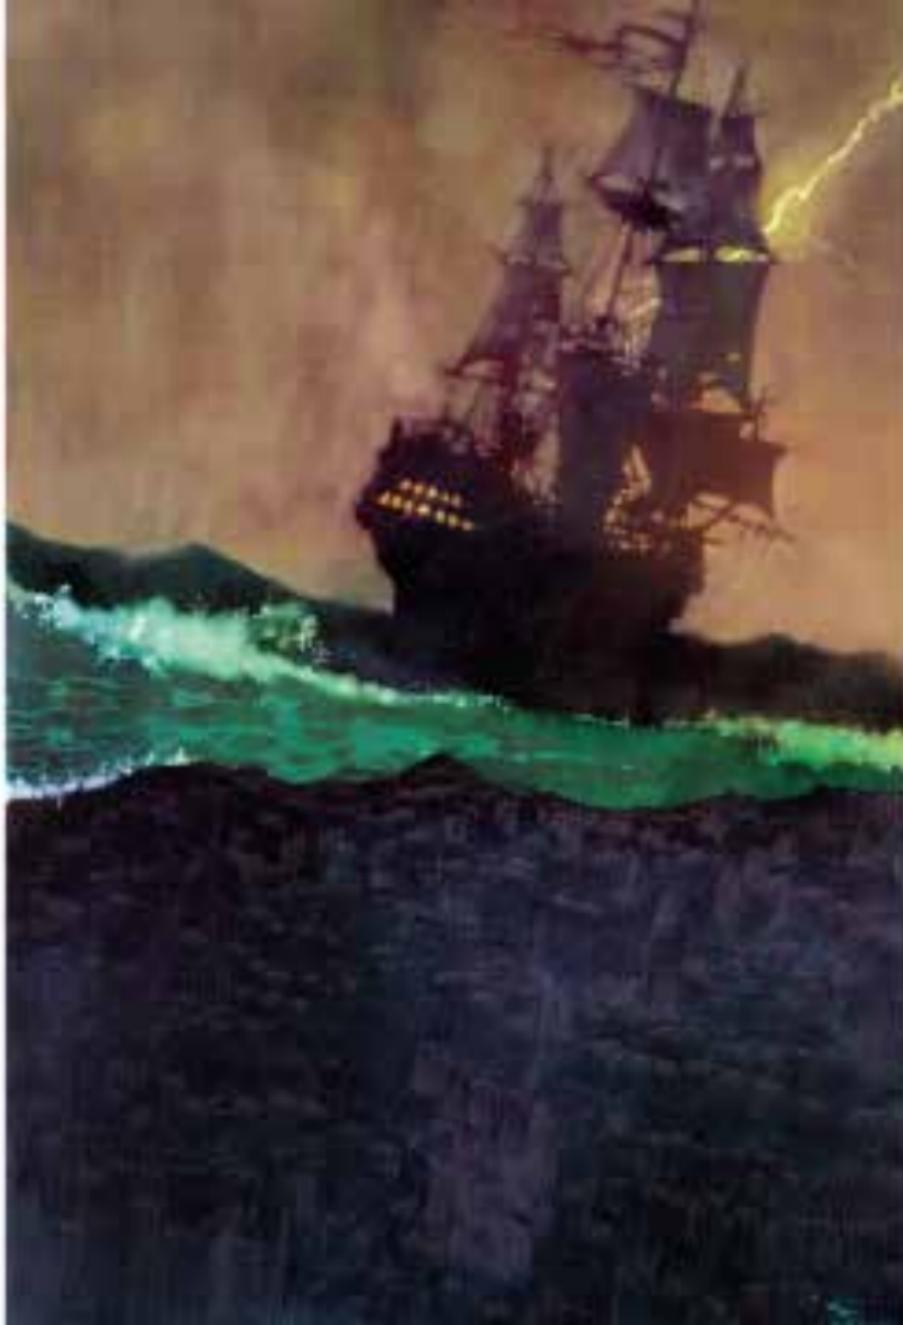

Illustration by Arthur Dove, 1920

Wartha points out that this transformation did not result from an increase in the total sponsoredographical content for reading public so much as the speculations of the marketplace and the birth of responses for stories or items conceptualized in magazines such as The Saturday Evening Post which were designed for general appeal. Whereas the comic strip responses tended illustrations that if they were going to compete for greater readership than a monthly journal, Electroline Robert Mearns pointed out, was aiming prior "when 'magazines like Psychology Today would ask for nonphotographic imagery describing life businesses...that was a pretty radical requirement in place of illustration."

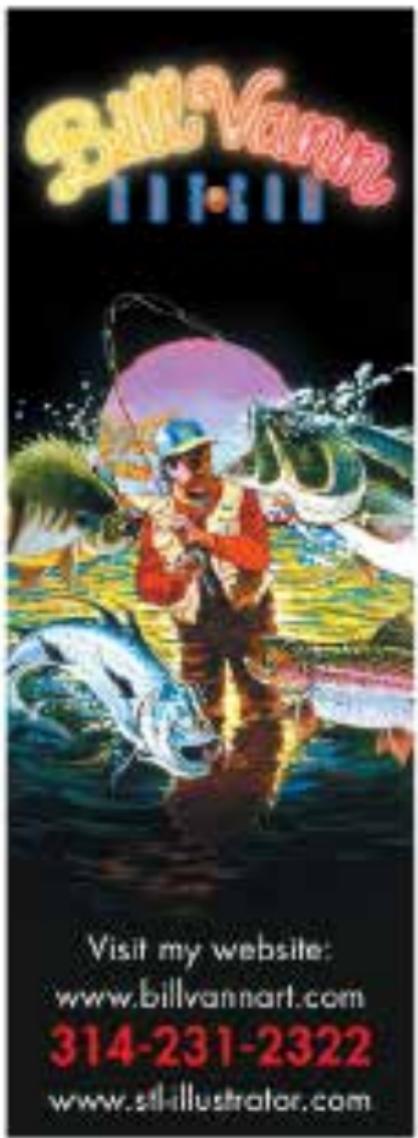

It is also true that this change in the content of illustrations was accompanied by a de-emphasis on the importance of the skill and technique that go into making a "slick" visual image. In other advertising illustrations would study anatomy and perspective and investing hours perfecting these craft. Now, however, photographic and other media techniques had helped to level the playing field between the experimental artist's skill. Furthermore, audiences were content with a less "slick" image. Such illustrations today is poorly designed and clearly executed, but is rendered because the editor like image is only to serve as a diagram for a conceptual treatment.

Diamond lived at the intersection of "concept" in illustrations, popular art, and gallery art. Arthur Dove, an artist for The Sunday News, observed, "The new things have evolved, we can look like anything, or you can't tell by looking...art therefore has very little to do with aesthetic expression; it has more to do with intellectual expression." Art critic Robert Hughes made a similar conclusion: "As far as I'm concerned, something is a work of art if it is made with declared intentions to be a work of art and placed in a context where it can act as a work of art."

Artists illustrations are distinctly not concept illustrations at this time. They also had to sit there when you can "tell by looking" that they are supposed to be art. There does not work for it in total!

THE CONTINUING IMPORTANCE OF LINEART IMAGES

Jesse Updike observed that "the ads in major publications on white paper is shared by writers and artists." The art focus where these two types of media come together is called "illustration." The balance between them—between visual form and verbal content—is part of the reason because visual or illustration sometimes the idea or story takes priority over the image. Other times the picture dominates. The task of

Visit my website:
www.billvannart.com
314-231-2322
www.stl-illustrator.com

present, so to get the whole ball picture is very encouraging. As artists such as [he] are, that neither works nor presents could unknown alone.

"The guardians with much of India's "concept art" are, whether illustrators or gallery owners, that the visual image is often reduced to just one of four colors. A fine great example illustrates such is Stan Storch's most able to balance the two with brilliance, but their example seems to have resulted most numbers of artists and critics are not thinking that this art can be informed by power or mainly relevant content."

"We are the logical extension of concept art in work by gallery artists such as James Helzer, Christopher West, or Barbara Kruger, whose art—particularly designed in more contemporary art movements today—consists of planned words, or sometimes nothing, or elsewise [ED.] signs. All practice of a strong "read" side of the requires has been abandoned, and such is, in the creative impulse that comes with combining the competing demands of the visual, sound."

"Most of the numerous paintings illustrated by Remick presents in our concept well in the implemented source of today's concept illustrations. We, I and company those visual images—the intensity of their line, the range of their color, their arrangement, their values, their design—most of the images of concept illustration look scratchy in comparison to Remick's work."

"Surveying 10 years of concept artist Trevor Packer reminds us of what the current he required his the image has lost in Christopher Renshaw's drawings early years of the present work of modern strategy illustrations, and you will see how far the art of drawing has fallen in 10 years. These current works may be brilliant in their own fashion, but their best work is simply unoriginal and devoid of the qualities that have been the hallmarks of good drawing, ever since Lucas, "Cleopatra" and "theough process" are no longer attractions in illustrations, but they can never be a permanent substitute for "genius." Any refusal of art that does not such a room from its location is destined to become and last without limit on the world economy rate."

"Renshaw, it is a pleasure to believe that "concept" are the unique provision of the artist's sake, so he ingested in his imagination like wisdom or academic. Color and shaped facsimile images, concepts, albeit in children's art. In former days, people imagined or demanded that purely visual images had heights and depths which regions could not yet. No photographic prints art writer has been able to retain. Renshaw's vision that "vision is a logical form of resolution than philosophy." Gary Gault, who was better soft winds than always aware, wrote when in your concepts a work: "The shoulder of man," he wrote, "is the Afghan [Japanese] family."

"Renshaw's drawings may not receive a strength as defined by many as the "new school," but they have their own indispensible distinction, attributed to the quality of the every they call or the products they sell. They are by their nature and are fine illustrations self-explanatory. The same general observation might made regarding Remick's paintings. Even if concept art might not find the "symbolism that invites a viewer's deeper interpretation," but there is a lot to be said for the consistency and potency of its images that can be absorbed in a visual multi media that is intentional like ours to musicians used in class. That's part of what visual art does...it's the shared attack of our prior experience.

In hindsight, we all of Degas's experiments were experimental. A varied viewer can identify paintings within the same group through the motions. However, Degas's strongest drawings and paintings remain undeniably solid. It is hard to envision them ever being superseded by concept art, or by whatever new fashion comes, after it. Ralph Waldo Emerson put it best: "The excellent is never finished."

THE HIGH C

Throughout his life, Basie has looked for that "high C," that elusive musical note. He abandoned the trumpet when he felt he would no longer be his very best, and searched for a note where he thought he could. He found it numerous.

Many years after he had achieved fame and fortune, he learned by his old trumpet teacher Eddie Barnes and sent him a portrait he had painted of Louis Armstrong and his note. The portrait was accompanied by a note reading, "I found my high C." ■

David Sarnoff is an attorney who practices entertainment law in Washington, D.C.

The author would like to thank Bill Basie and Fred Lerner for their thoughtful and inspiring conversations; as a result, the author may have to admit ultimate musical indebtedness to both men who changed forever with their influences and performances those first years under Basie.

Portrait of Louis Armstrong, photo by Scherl

GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION

www.galleryofillustration.com

Frank Kupfer

Dave Thompson - United States

Bring out the creative art from books, magazines and comics, print fine art pieces, Pop art, Fantasy, surrealism, science fiction, animals, still life, historical, landscapes, everyday, editorial, humoristic, urban, real world, and more.

Mike Sibley

www.galleryofillustration.com

(For books visit... www.bookendsllc.com)

Robert Heindel Talks About Bernie Fuchs

Renowned illustrator Robert Heindel died this year. He was known around the world for his lucid paintings of doctors. Before he died, he spoke eloquently about Bernie Fuchs and his impact on American illustration.

I first met Bernie Fuchs when I was working at Doremus and contemplating a move to New York. Somebody said, you'd better leave here if you want to succeed. It was a typical "you're going to succeed" comment.

In Detroit, I had been working at the same studio where Bernie started out. When I arrived in Detroit in the 1960s, anyone who was in Detroit mentioned at the studio of Bernie Fuchs. You could say things like "Bernie Fuchs worked in this room" with some of us. Bernie was a real live Wheeler and上下游 the Art Group, he was the hottest thing in town.

He blazed the trail from Detroit to New York, so you up all the right paths were now and almost the people who followed him how to do it.

After Bernie left Detroit, Mark English and others entered the comic striping arena. They worked for a radio, tape press, not an there ever, then used their own partnership to create New York work, then migrated to New York. I arrived in Detroit just 6 months after Mark English left Detroit for New York. When I started to follow that same path, Bernie was one generation. There is a lot of hierarchy in business.

Bernie's influence was that he could take the same assignment that everyone else got and do something special with it. Every artist has creative choices to make, and I came to find that sooner or later he is not at peace if he's not go forward ahead of the beginning. That's how you know that you have to protect yourself, and mostly, if you care about it you have to protect your work. Bernie had always been protective of his ability. Not that he was talk—quite the contrary.

But he knew what he had, and he always wanted the opportunity to do his very best. Bernie worked as hard as he could, harder than anyone else I know.

The first job I worked on something and you know that Bernie was interested, you know that you had to do the very best you could possibly do. He brought that sort of example. And if you were compared with Bernie, you know going into it that he was going to beat the day out of you, that we never let the competition get in the way. We are truly great friends.

You think your competition is the guy you want to get a raise from that day. But you realize that you are your competition. The job is your competition.

When I pushed the boundaries, I made my mark harder in art, and chose my business partners over. Now I don't have the money level I once did. You realize when you get to be my age that you aren't really as good as you wanted to be. You have to confront the question, "How good am I? Who could I be better?" All I can tell you is that I have learned all the time. And that's what I like about Bernie. He always pushes for own boundaries. Bernie grows a certain. After you become successful, like Bernie, its inevitable that others start to copy you. Some artists, you start to copy yourself. Bernie stayed on the move. He continued to grow, perhaps because he could have Mark English's Institutes behind him.

Serious though cartooning, nevertheless there business the different reason, but Bernie is probably one of the greatest illustrators that ever lived. I looked at certain who he has done over the years and said to myself "that is just brilliant." Old master. I wouldn't tell Bernie that. Look at the things he does. Who he would paint a tree with the sunlight behind it? I would never imagine it.

We all try teach the same thing about art.

I am the last to have been as my friend. ■

Bernie Fuchs' Career Highlights

EDUCATION

Princeton University, School of Art, 1931; Yale, Masters—1934.

TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Professor of Painting, Art Dept., Pratt Institute—1930;
Professor of Illustration, New York University—1930.

PUBLICATIONS

BOOKS:

Human Figures in Illustration by Amy Littauer

Illustration Books

Painting American Drawings by Steven Katz and Marshall Surovitz Circles and Companionship First, Drawing

The Painter is Selected 1989–1990 by Wolf Kiel

Our American Drawings by Wolf Kiel

The Painter in America 1930–1940 by Katz and Surovitz

100 Years of American Painters

200 Years of Jewish Painters

ARTICLES WRITTEN:

Art in Education, Sept. 1, 1931; May, 1932; A Survey of Painted Books, 1932;
Book Collector, December, 1932; Chaplin Today, March/April, 1937; June/July 1938; Magazine Lamp, Sept. 1938; April, 1939; French Light Drawings, 1939;
U.S. Magazine, vol. 1, no. 1, April, 1940; vol. 16, no. 1, 1942; Famous Artists, January, 1942; Film Drawings 1948.

ART REVIEWS WRITTEN:

Legends Drawn by Gail Schlesinger Little Groups, 1939

Chapman by Bill Goldfarb Little, Boston, 1939

Cordelia Shedd by 20th Century Fox Studio for Young Readers, 1939

The Storybook Artist Forum, 1939 Books for Young Readers, 1939

Books by the Disney Prod. Co. by Wolf Kiel, 1939

Disney Stories by the Four Color Group, 1939; Four Color, 1939

The Child as an Artist A Self-Portrait Studio, 1939; Disney, 1939

Drawing for the Movie by Milt格拉夫, Princeton, 1939; Disney, 1939

And Lucifer Smiled Forum Film Art Forum (Edizioni) 1939.

MATERIALS:

Author of the Day, Set in India at New York, 1942

Shantara King, Author of Day & Brightness, 1944

Two Illustrated Children's Books, Washington Library

Illustrated Photo Album, 1940

Art of Film, 1940

Art of Film, 1941

For Bold Friends from the Faculty of Illustrators

On Illustration 1941

Bookish Drawings 1941

Author's Book of Choice

Sketches of Art College, Art Sketches

Art 1939 and 1940 Forum, New York, Philadelphia,

Hollywood, Los Angeles

Society of Professional Illustrators

Comments '37, '38

Painting, Sculpture & Advertising

1938–1939

SELECTED CONTRIBUTIONS:

American Culture, 1940, England

Academy of the New York Illustrators, California

Illustrator's Studio, New York, New York

International Illustrators, New York, New York

Midwest Council of Art, Kansas City, Missouri, 1939

Midwest Museum, Indianapolis, Indiana

Midwest College of Fine Art, Milwaukee, Wisconsin

New York Historical Society, New York, New York

Society of Illustrators Annual Catalogue, 1939–1940, 1941–1942

1943 Catalogue, 1944 Catalogue, 1945 Catalogue, 1946 Catalogue

Illustrations of Our Times, Board of Trade, 1940–1941

Illustrations of Our Times, New York

100 Years of Great Books, New York Historical Society, New York

100 Years of Great Books, American Art Center, Miami Beach, Florida

Living Drawings, Turner Galleries, Art Center, Colorado

Gathering of Ideas, University Galleries, Los Angeles, California

100 Years of Great Books, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, University Galleries, Los Angeles, California

Illustrations of Our Times, University Galleries, Los Angeles, California

Recreational Group Exhibitions, "Colors in Design," 1940–1941, California

Illustrations, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

Living Drawings, Los Angeles Art Center, 1940–1941, 1942–1943, 1944–1945, 1946–1947, 1948–1949

New and Notable:

THE PAPERBACK ART OF JAMES AVATI

BY PAT O'NEIL AND HELENHEA FULTON
200-PAGE, BLK & WHT.
$35.00 HARDCOVER
CLOTH & CLOTH, 2001

James Avati (1912-2001) is regarded as the pre-eminent painter of paperback art in the second half of the 20th century. He was known as the "Master of the 'Fangs of the Paperbacks,'" and his good name. Books with his name sold in the tens of millions, and his painting style involved series of mutations. Avati designed movie comic illustrations for books by the likes of Steinbeck, Faulkner, Salinger, Caldwell and Tolstoy, among that appeared steadily in visual versions of the premiums he worked for the New American Library (Doubleday), and for every major trade paperback publisher including Random, Avon, Pocket, Fawcett and Dell. In this lavishly illustrated and handsomely designed book, author Peter Schreyer's reiteration, Avati's life and 40-year career helping to tell the the story of reproduction drives from man's original paintings, sketches, and photographs. His own originals, most of which have been salvaged from the shelves of American publishers during the past 30 years, now fetch many thousands of dollars among collectors. Many are presented here for the first time in full color, high-quality reproductions.

CHEAP THRILLS

BY ERIC LARSEN
208 PAGES, FULL COLOR
$35.00 HARDCOVER, $14.95 PAPERBACK;
$25.00 BEING SHIPPED SEPARATELY
MONOGRAM PRESS, 2001

When last published in 1972, Eric Larsen's Cheap Thrills: An Informal History of the Pulp Magazines became one of the grandounding books in field. It has long been considered one of the definitive histories of the pulp magazine era, and has been out of print for decades. Thankfully, however, Larsen has now decided to revise this seminal work in a new edition—completely redesigned, and containing numerous of new material, lost and gained. The full-color 12-inch square format features over 100 great cover images, and the text has been expanded and revised to add many new references by the great masters of the pulps.

The book illustrates not only the history of the pulps' uses and publications, but also delves into the backgrounds of the will-known writers who began professional life as pulp magazine writers: Harald Luedtke, Maxie Goray, Fiddling First, Rudolf Nuremberg, Raymond Chandler, Earl Stanley Gardner, Ray Bradbury and Herman Wouk. Every genre is explored—the cowboy ones, the detective ones, science fiction and fantasy, love, sports and adventure. It shall indeed

LITTLE NERO IN SLUMBERLAND: SPLENDID SUNDAYS

BY ERIC LARSEN
128 PAGES, FULL COLOR
$25.00 HARDCOVER
MONOGRAM PRESS, 2001

Lester Uryans' now hardly a household name Little Nero first appeared in Sunday editions in October, 1933. Right here the point, this general reading fixture was a critical success too late than a bigger-than-newspaper market. The genius of William McCay's comic strip appreciated over time and Little Nero, among others, was its appearance, because the first comic strip to bridge the culture gap between popular pulp and fine art. His the Little Nero comic was the subject of exhibits at the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art at New York and the Louvre in Paris. From the 400+ all-page related albums, 1933 and 1936 comic art, strips, and early comic strips that continue to fascinate him至今 are reprinted today.

Peter Mennell's intriguing new book attempts to recapture the glories of those original Sunday comic strip pages by presenting the reprints in black-and-white form to be used full-size (over 11 x 22 inches), in previous full color. The book includes sixteen original Sunday strips (1933-1934) in their original newspaper-size format. Each of the 112 pages have been digitally enhanced to probably capture every color nuance and detail of the original prints, while maintaining tone, lines, and other imperfections of the source material. The end result is a stunning work of art. Even if you have owned older reprints of Little Nero strips on the past, you're never going to think like this. If you're fan of Little Nero, this book is a must.

THE COMPLETE EC COMICS LIBRARY: THE COMPLETE PHOTO-FICTION

BY ERIC LARSEN
144 PAGES, FULL COLOR
$35.00 HARDCOVER
MONOGRAM PRESS, 2001

Those of us who have collected Eric Larsen's amazing EC Library sets may wonder how often we've wondered if there could ever be a set collecting the Best Photo Issue. Well, it is long last. Gramercy Publishing is releasing the final component of The Complete EC Library: Photo issue and highly sought after for generations. Best Illustrated, Tracy Illustrated, Crime & Mystery and Comics & Illustration among the better-known EC titles. Not only are each of the published issues contained in this elusive hardcover set, including the rare Short Hat, 1,000+ full-color copies were recently distributed, but so the 11 previously unpublished Best Photo Issues.

Photo-fiction magazines write like comic books, but larger, and the interiors were not in color or they were not subject in the comic books. All of the reprints feature stunning reproductions from the original art (as well as the EC Library books) and showcase the work of some of the greatest artists to ever work in comics: Reed Crandall, Jack Davis, George Evans, Graham Ingels, Jack Kamen, Rudy Nappi, Joe Orlando, Neal Adams, Chester Gould, Angelo Torres, Al Williamson and Will Eisner, just to name a few. Robert Bernstein, Al Feldstein, Daniel Green, John Lister, Jack Uzick, and Richard Scitovitz.

THE WORST WRITING OF ROBERT E. HOWARD

BY ROBERT E. HOWARD

EIGHT EDITIONS

EDITION ONE: PIRATES AND VAMPIRES
EDITION TWO: LOST IN THE FOREST OF FIRE
EDITION THREE: ROTTING, ROTTING, ROTTING
EDITION FOUR: COLLECTABLES, 2004

Giant-Size Collectors! You'll find them here with this new collection from reclusive hardcover larvae bookbinder... Amazing over 1,200 pages—with all of Robert E. Howard's writings from the original run of WEird Tales reprinted—all the notes & illustrations! All of the verse, plus all of the letters to the editor! All of the pages are reprinted right from the original pulp magazines with no editing, and no cutouts! *

Vintage Paperbacks and Pulps Mystery • SciFi • Counter Culture • Science

THE RUGGED BEAUTY OF 20TH CENTURY COUNTRY

Our entire store is filled with vintage books. We also carry original illustration and comic art.

614 Post Street, San Francisco, CA 94109

415.749.0554 Open Wed-Sun, 11am-6pm

www.kayobooks.com

kayobooks@kayobooks.com

BudPlant.com

FREE

A
B
C
D
E
F

*Use Promo-Code FLMAGGS at checkout and receive PRICE SHIPPING on your order online!

ONE ADDRESS PER ORDER. PLEASE ALLOW 4-6 WEEKS FOR DELIVERY. RESTRICTED TO USA & CANADA.

BudPlant.com

EXHIBITIONS & EVENTS

Stories to Tell: Masterworks from the Kelly Collection of American Illustration

February 14, 2004 through May 21, 2006

Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service

Daleck Museum of Art-Chief Curator Stephen Kalush will select approximately 80 masterworks from the Kelly Collection, an exceptionally important private holding of original oil paintings, watercolors, and mixed media artworks in the "golden age" of American illustration (c. 1880-1940). During this period, illustrations of exceptional quality were produced by American artists familiar with the European academic tradition and yet fully technically and stylistically part of that inheritance. Prior to 1880, books and magazines were illustrated primarily with line engravings that intervened little in the manner and quality of the original paintings and drawings, but new advances in printing technology led to reproductions that were more direct copies. The exhibition will explore all aspects of this publishing phenomenon, including covers, advertisements, and the technical aspects of the production process. The emphasis will, of course, be on the visual discourses that accompanied the narratives, made by such auteurs as Howard Pyle, Norman Rockwell, N.C. Wyeth, Dean Cornwell, and F.C. Leyendecker. Their compelling stories became highly popular as amateur mass media much like the early internet. A broad range of fine artworks will complement the exhibitions, as well as illustrated catalogues containing work by Otto Dix, Ernst Fuchs, and the collector Richard L. Kelly.

For more information, visit the museum's website at www.daleckmuseum.org/.

PIXAR: 20 Years of Animation

December 14, 2005 through February 6, 2006

Museo de Arte de Monterrey

In keeping with the Museum's long tradition of presenting animation, this is the most extensive gallery exhibition that Pixar has ever devoted to its great. Featuring over 500 works of original art no less for the first time from Pixar Animation Studios, the show includes paintings, concept art, renderings, and an array of digital installations. These include several film extracts from the Pixar's computer-generated films—including Toy Story, A Bug's Life, Toy Story 2, Monsters, Inc., Finding Nemo, The Incredibles, Cars, and many others. The exhibition also includes a complete retrospective of Pixar films. Demonstrating the symbiotic relationship between traditional and digital media powered by the studio's own in-house pixel printers, Pixar: 20 Years of Animation is a tribute to the art and vision which has revolutionized the genre.

For more information, visit www.mam.mx

National Geographic: The Art of Exploration

Now through May 11, 2006

The Barnes Foundation Museum of Impressionism

For more than a century, the National Geographic Society's illustrations have taken readers to places beyond the reach of a normal lens—magnifying the imagination to destinations that can be seen only through the artist's eye. Visual and compelling, these images have allowed us to witness the birth of our planet and look forward to the achievements of space... helping us to understand our history and the importance of the natural world. Featured artists H.C. Worth, Andrew Wenzel, Charles M. Russell, Louis Fuertes, Tom Lovell, Robert McColl, Peter Hines, Thornton Oakley, James Gurney, and many others are represented in this striking exhibition celebrating more than one hundred years of National Geographic.

For more information, visit www.bnfm.org

Flora, Fauna and Fantasy: The Art of Dorothy Lathrop

March 25, 2006 through May 21, 2006

The Brandywine River Museum, PA

During the first half of the 20th century, Dorothy Lathrop was known for her colorful and imaginative ink drawings and watercolor art. Illustrator of more than 30 children's books, including the 1937 Newbery Award winner Fritz the Catfish, she was the first recipient of the prestigious Caldecott medal in 1938. This exhibition features over 100 of her distinctive works, including cut-ups from the first issue of her visual publication.

For information visit: www.brandywineriver.org ■

In the Next Screen...

JAMES BOND

JENNIFER LOPEZ

THE CREEPY GIRLS

The Making of James Bond, American Media Systems, 2006
The Art of Charles Shreve, 2006
The Making of the Creepy Girls, 2006
...and much more!