

Illustration

ISSUE NUMBER FIFTY-ONE
ILLUS.COM

ILLUSTRATION ART

Spring 2016, Dallas | Fall 2016, New York

Featuring the Finest Illustration Art from the Most Important Collections

HOWARD K. BROWN (Lost City of May, Anticipating Bonhams multi-owner February 10th). Oil-on-ceramic on board, 24.75 x 16 in. Estimate: $8,000-$10,000

SEEKING CONSIGNMENTS | DELIVERING RESULTS

Inquiries: Ed James | Ext. 1208 | EdJ@HA.com | Todd Hogen | Ext. 1180 | ToddH@HA.com
HA.com/Illustration

DALLAS | NEW YORK | BEVERLY HILLS | SAN FRANCISCO | CHICAGO | PHILADELPHIA | AMSTERDAM | HONG KONG

Always Accepting Quality Consignments in the Following
$50,000+ Gross Bidder Standard

PLAID MANGALORE, 1870-1880, 44x44x14, 19450

HERITAGE
AUCTIONS
AMERICA'S AUCTION HOUSE

CONTENTS BY

John Gannam
(1880–1960)

Advertising illustration for
St. Mary's Shampoo, 1903

PRINTED IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

DANIEL ZIMMER
EDITOR/PUBLISHER/DESIGNER
ILLUSTRATION@GMAIL.COM

CONTRIBUTORS:

DAVID SALINDERS
JOHN WITK

Illustration has moved to General Home

ILLUSTRATION MAGAZINE
ISSUE NUMBER 50, SPRING 2016
Copyright © 2016 by Illustration Magazine.

All content except the copyright notice and from other contributors is © 2016 Illustration Magazine. All rights reserved.
No part of this publication may be reproduced without written consent of the author or publisher. Please contact for permissions or reprint requests or more information.

ILLUSTRATION is published quarterly. Single copies may be purchased for $15.00 plus $3.00 postage and handling. Subscriptions and advertising rates available at www.illustrationmagazine.com. Back issues of Illustration are available online.

For advertising inquiries, call 314-527-0100 or email ILLUSTRATION@GMAIL.COM.

Illustration Magazine
3840 Russell Boulevard
St. Louis, Missouri 63130
Tel: 314-527-0100
Email: ILLUSTRATION@GMAIL.COM

ILLUSTRATION.MAGAZINEHE.COM
ILLUSTRATIONPRESS.COM

PRINTED IN THE U.S.A.

Illustration

VOLUME THIRTEEN, ISSUE NUMBER FIFTY-ONE – 2016

Contents

4 John Gannam

by David Salinders

48 The Invisible Frank Walts

by John Witk

64 C.B. Mayhark

by David Salinders

110 New and Notable

112 Exhibitions and Events

From the Editor...

I am excited to announce that The Art of Dean Corwell has shipped, and if you pre-ordered a copy you will have received it by now. Early reviews have been extremely positive, and I want to thank everyone who pre-ordered the book and waited patiently for it to arrive. The book had a very limited print run and is now sold out, but you may be able to pick up a copy from Badia Art Books, or Sharp Ng Books, while supplies last. If you missed out on the sale, be sure to stay tuned to my website for announcements concerning future releases!

The current issue presents a detailed look at the life and work of illustrator John Gannam, one of my favorite watercolorists. Author David Salinders has turned up a wealth of information about this poorly documented artist, and I am excited to see what he adds to present his article here. David has also contributed a survey on the pulp-artist C.B. Mayhark, who produced many aviation-themed covers for titles such as Gil Blane, Flying Aces, and more. His story is drawn from his magnificent website, www.pulpartists.com. If you haven't seen the site yet, you should check it out!

Our final feature concerns the work of Frank Walts, another poorly documented illustrator who produced covers for The Monitor, The Critic, The Liberator, The New Moses, and other uncredited publications. Ever a bringer of art to a powerful and diverse style, and author John Witk presents a thorough history of this life and work.

DANIEL ZIMMER
PUBLISHER

ILLUSTRATION MAGAZINE

the illustrated gallery

J.F. KERNAN (1878-1958)

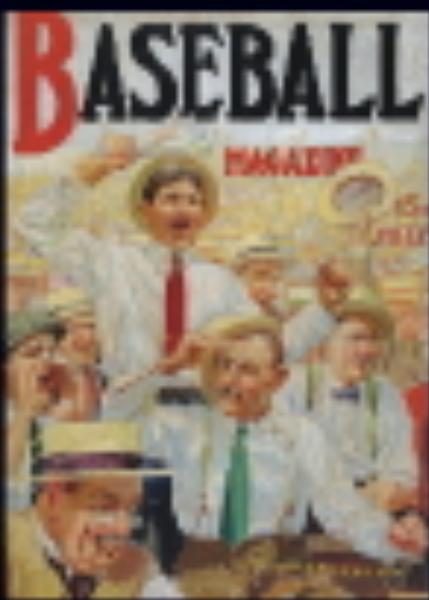

"Rescuers at the Gas Pump"

Cover for Capper's Farmer Magazine, February 1927
Oil on Canvas, 24" x 28". Signed Lower Right

"Sledding"

Cover for Capper's Magazine, February 1933
Oil on Canvas, 24" x 28". Signed Lower Left

Cover for Baseball Magazine, July 1947
Oil on Canvas, 24" x 24". Signed Lower Right

"Spring Reunion"

Cover for Capper's Farmer Magazine July 1933
Oil on Canvas, 24" x 30". Signed Lower Left

Please visit www.IllustratedGallery.com to view our complete collection of over 1800 works by America's leading illustrators.

436 Commerce Dr., Fort Washington, PA 19034
Bobby Rossouw, President — Email: bobby@IllustratedGallery.com

(267) 992-7166

the illustrated gallery

JOHN FORD CLYMER (1907-1989)

"Good Times"

Cover for the Saturday Evening Post, April 18, 1964
Oil on Canvas, 36" x 27". Signed Lower Left

Please visit www.IllustratedGallery.com to view our complete collection of over 1800 works by America's leading illustrators.

418 Commerce Dr., Fort Washington, PA 19034
Holly Rizzo, President — Email: holly@IllustratedGallery.com

(267) 992-7166

John Gannam, 1948

JOHN GANHAM

by David Saunders

In 1981, John Gannam was posthumously inducted into the Hall of Fame of the Society of Illustrators of New York. To mark the occasion, the club president delivered a ceremonial address extolling the artist's many professional accomplishments, awards, and honors. When everyone was suitably reminded that a giant had walked among them, albeit a giant of fine-foot-dear, it was also confessed that precious little was known about the man behind the art. "The most difficult detective work connected with this honor," was to pin down the life story of the late and elusive John Gannam. Many knew a bit about him, but it was mostly the same bit. The only fact that everyone agreed upon was what a superb illustrator he was.¹

A big part of that difficulty was based on the fact that John Gannam was born Fouzi Hanna Bougħanima on May 24, 1905, in Meshghara, Lebanon, of Syrian ancestry. His father, Hanna Ibrahim Bougħanima, was born on April 3, 1876, in Meshghara, Zabla, Lebanon, of Syrian ancestry. His mother, Noje Bougħanima, was born on February 19, 1883, in Lebanon, of Syrian and Brazilian Jewish ancestry. His parents married in 1903 and had two children, Fouzi (b.1905), and Forrest (b.1908).

Mesgħara is a small village in the valley of a mountainous region of Lebanon, at 3500 feet above sea level. The largest nearby city is Zahlé, Lebanon. In the timeline of the volatile geopolitics of the Middle East, 1905 was a period when Lebanon and Syria were part of the collapsing Ottoman Empire of Turkey. The Young Turk Revolution of 1908, during the Second Constitutional Era, brought civil strife, warring factions, genocide, and mass migration.

On September 3, 1908, the Bougħanima family left Mesgħara and traveled to the United States

Advertising illustration for St. Regis Blouses. (H&H Watercolor and gouache on board. Photo courtesy of Illustration House, NY)

THE MARTYR

故其子曰：「吾父之子，其名也。」

The HOOVER

Additional Resources for the Home Owner 381 and all of which may be paid in cash.

It is the best way to do it, and the only way to do it that will not give the man who wants to buy your house a chance to make a good deal of money out of it.

Meeting Minutes for the Board of Directors, November 17, 2013 on the steam ship La Gouverneur. They were accompanied on the voyage by two relatives from the same village, the married sister of Hama Ibrahim Boughanam, Lacife Khouari (b.1886) and her one-year-old son, Frédéric Khouari (b.1906). Both families listed their U.S. destination as the home of Lacife Khouari's husband, Peter Khouari (b.1883), who had emigrated to America the year before and lived at 34 Nordic Street in Worcester, Massachusetts, where he worked as a laborer at a wire mill. After three weeks, the ship docked in New York City on October 2, 1909. They were met by Uncle Peter Khouari, who brought them by train to his modest home in Worcester, MA.

To support the family, the father worked as a street peddler. He changed his name from Harry Ibrahim Baughman to John Abuahara Ganson. His wife became Nellie Ganson. He joined an association of Syrian immigrants, who pooled their resources to buy who lesse quantities of dry goods at discounted prices, and then resold their share of the stock at a profit through a nationwide distribution network of Syrian-American grocery stores. John Abraham Garmon became a traveling salesman of dry goods and groceries, but instead of hitting the road on his own and leaving his wife and two sons, the family of four began a nomadic lifestyle, peddling dry goods to affiliated grocers all across the nation.

On April 30, 1910, five months after their arrival, the U.S. Census recorded the family living at 328 West Main Street in Durham, North Carolina, at the home of a Syrian dry goods merchant, Arvil Khouri Patisook, a cousin of Uncle Peter Khouri.

The next time the family shows up on archival records was one year later, on April 10, 1911, when the third child, Edward Garrison, was born in Brooklyn, New York, which made him the first U.S. Citizen in the Garrison family.

One year later, in 1912, the family had moved to Enid, Oklahoma, where they owned and operated the Gannen Grocery Store at 402 South Grand Avenue, which became their first permanent home in America. The father ran the store while the children attended public school. In 1913, a fourth child, Albert Gannen, was born in Enid.

According to the artist, "In 1915, a blacksmith planted the seed in me to become an artist. He painted the wheels and side panels of horse-drawn carriages with decorative scenes of faraway travels, like a sunrise over the desert, or a sunset over the ocean. I was ten years old and fascinated watching this man dip brushes in cans of ordinary house paint, and on a piece of wood create a clipper ship under full sail."

In 1916, a fifth child, Elmer Gannen, was born to Enid. One year later, the father sold the grocery store and the family of seven left Oklahoma and moved to Chicago, where the father owned and operated the new Gannen Grocery Store at 667 West 24th Place, while the family lived at 638 South Dearborn Street.

On September 12, 1918, during the Great War, the father registered with his local draft board. He was recorded at the time to be 42, of medium height, slender build, with brown eyes and dark hair. He listed his birthday as April 5, 1876, in Syria. The document is clearly signed by the father under the name, "John Abraham Gannen." With a wife and five sons to support, he was not selected for military service.

One day in the autumn of 1918, while walking home from school, Fouzi Gannen passed a bookshop window that displayed a group of illustrations by Frederic Remington (1861-1909). The 13 year old boy was profoundly inspired by those images, and each subsequent time he walked back and forth to school, he was transfixed by that window display. Finally, one evening after supper, he attempted to recreate the enchanting Western scenes from memory. These were his first drawings.

In 1919, the father became too ill to work. As the medical bills grew more costly, the family was forced to sell the grocery store. As the father's condition grew worse, the mother supported the family by working at home as a dressmaker. When a woman needed to work from home in those days, it was customary for a garment factory to provide her with a bundle of cut materials and a leased sewing machine. The dresses were assembled at home, for which she was paid on a piecemeal basis, according to the number of completed dresses returned to the manufacturer minus the rental fee for the sewing machine.

Advertising illustration for Kroc's Laundry, Indianapolis, 1932

Advertising illustration for Kroc's Laundry, Indianapolis, 1934

Immigration, circa 1900. Reproduced courtesy of U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, Washington, D.C.

In late of 1919, the eldest son Fazl Gasson, age 14, completed the eighth grade. He received no higher education, but instead entered the workforce to help support the family. His first job was working as a bellboy at the famous Blackstone Hotel in Chicago. He was dressed in a snappy outfit and raced to accommodate each guest, but he handled a constant stream of demands during his 12-hour shift from 6:00 AM to 6:00 PM. He was exhausted each evening by the time he returned home, where his family struggled to survive. His father encouraged him to hold on to his painful dreams, despite their temporary hardships, and he enrolled his son in an evening course at the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts, at 81 East Madison Street. Fazl Gasson was thrilled to officially join the European tradition of Art, which in his eyes seemed to create magical illusions that were so radically different from the graphics of his cultural background—traditionally non-representational, in preference for the spiraling arabesques of Islamic calligraphy and geometric patterns. His first class was drawing from a plaster cast of a foot from Michelangelo's David. He had to buy some basic art supplies, like a quality drawing pencil, but he could only afford cheap writing paper. One day, while working at the hotel, he noticed the menus were printed on exceptionally fine, heavy paper.

SWANN
AUCTION GALLERIES

Woodcut hand-printing from The Lure of the Wild (Holt-Dick, 1900). Estimate $10,000-$15,000.

Alice Neel, Face, 1922. Estimate $10,000-$15,000.

KR. Dezsö, Front Cover of the Monthly Journal of Oz (1900). Estimate $800-$1,200.

Accepting Quality Consignments of Original Illustration Art

Contact Christine von der Linde with inquiries: cvd@swann Galleries.com

104 East 25th Street New York, NY 10016 • 212.254.4710 • SWANNGALLERIES.COM

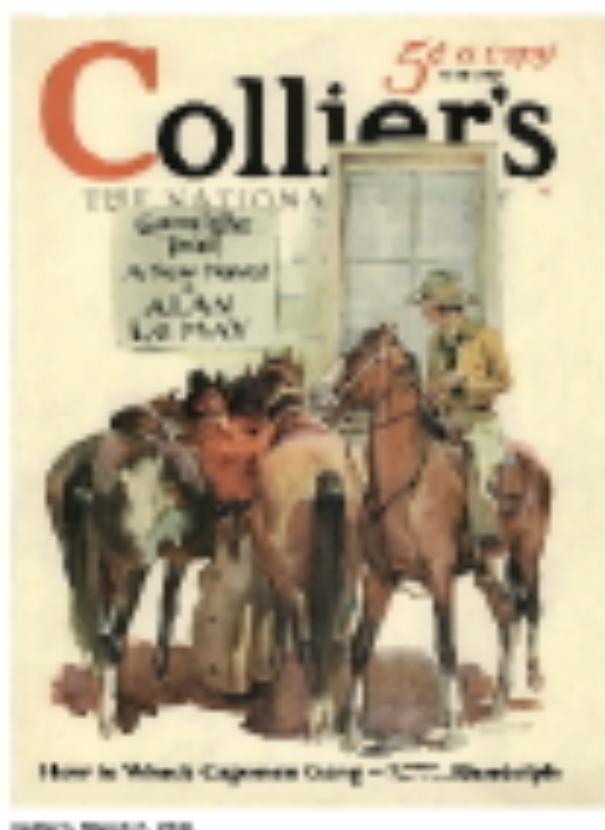

Boz Illustration: Maxfield Parrish. Gouache on board. 18½" x 24½". Photo courtesy of Heritage Auctions, Ha.com

Boz Illustration for Lillian's, 1916. Watercolor and gouache on board. Photo courtesy of IllustrationHouse, Ha.com

He began to save discarded menus to use for drawings, but a manager discovered this and made him stop. After only a few weeks, he realized he was trapped in a tug of war between his long hours at work and the demands of his evening art classes. He decided the job was more important. His family needed him to earn money, not to spend it on a pipe dream, so he gave up drawing lessons and concentrated on bell-hopping. Eventually, he found an alternative way to continue his studies of human anatomy. He bought a classical nude statue in a junk shop and later claimed to have made a thousand drawings of it from every conceivable angle. Although "a thousand drawings" might sound exaggerated, that is actually typical behavior for an autodidact who pursues self-education without an authority's guidance, and unwittingly exceeds a reasonable goal in pursuit of an idealized level of perfection.

In September of 1915, Fouzi Gaanon began to work as a newsboy on the streets of Chicago. This was at a time when the local newspaper chains were involved in a circulation war of violent intimidation, fire bombings,

October, 1927, $1.00

HEARTWOOD AUCTIONS

Featuring original art by:

Frank R. Paul - Roy G. Krenkel
Virgil Finlay - and other fine artists

The largest inventory in the world of pulps and vintage magazines, with a quarter century of experience in rare books and collectibles.

- Now Accepting Consignments—Cash Upfront
- Small or Large Collections—We Come to You
- Fair Rates and Generous Terms
- Direct Purchase Available

2580 E. Oakland Park Blvd., Suite 305
Fort Lauderdale, FL 33306

www.heartwoodauctions.com sales@heartwoodauctions.com

954-565-8029

At Right: Original Art by Frank R. Paul for a story in 'Grazia' magazine. Signed. Gouache on board. 18.75" x 24". Famed and rewards of newsstand dealers. These anomalies solidified Chicago's warlord culture, which brutally defended the competing gang territories. These notorious enforcers included the North Side Gang of Dean O'Banion (1882-1926), who became the arch rival of Al Capone (1899-1947) in the boisterous years of the Roaring '20s. So this was a tough time to be a Chicago newsboy.

Art Student Gets A Break In His New York Studio

Things only got worse. On January 17, 1920, the Eighteenth Amendment took effect, which made the sale of alcohol a federal crime. Demand exceeded supply to such an outrageous extent that law enforcement was quickly overwhelmed. Politicians had intended to prohibit unscrupulous behavior, but inadvertently generated a national syndicate of organized crime that controlled and coordinated the wholesale import, manufacture, storage, tracking, and distribution of alcoholic beverages. Criminal gangs were suddenly involved in a wildly lucrative industry on a scale that was previously unimaginable.

On the exact same day that Prohibition began, January 17, 1920, the U.S. Census records listed the Garrison family living at 642 South Dearborn Street in Chicago. The father was still unemployed while the mother worked as a "Dressmaker-at Home." The oldest son, Fourni Garrison, worked as a "Newspaper—On The Street," and the four youngest sons attended school.

In the summer of 1926, Fourni Garrison answered a want-ad in the Chicago Daily Tribune for an errand boy at the Crescent Engineering Company, 161 West Harrison Street—"Good chance for advancement and to learn a trade; good salary; can also use a few boys after school hours." Crescent Engineering produced illustrations for the world's largest mail-order general merchandise catalogs, such as the National Cash & Seal Company, the Charles William Store, and Montgomery Ward. The company employed over 100 skilled artisans in the production of halftone engraving, zinc etchings, woodcuts, electrotyping, photography,

Allen King Illustration for Sperry Turbograde Leader Wines (1950) (page 11)

Advertising Illustration, circa 1950s

Barry Moser, c. 1990s. Illustration for Home. 38" x 17".
Book courtesy of Studio Moser Art.

Story Illustration, circa 1960.

Story Illustration for Author's House Journal, February 1967.

and commercial art. Fenn Garrison ran back and forth between all departments delivering jobs through every stage of production. He remained after work in order to learn about lettering, layout, and drawing techniques by watching staff artists. He also copied illustrations by famous artists in the slick magazines, such as McClelland Barclay (1881-1942), Norman Rockwell (1869-1958), Andrew Loog Oldham (1892-1989), August Straker (1896-1966), and Arthur William Brown (1881-1966). According to the artist, "I learned to imitate the style and medium of all the top illustrations of that time." His initial efforts only irritated the surface appearance of other artists, because he had little understanding of underlying considerations, such as color theory, composition, proportion, or perspective. He spent his evenings drawing at home until he had produced an impressive portfolio of derivative samples.

On October 17, 1929, after two years of prolonged illness, the father John Abraham Garrison died at the age of 44 in Chicago. After this tragic loss, the eldest son and his mother realized they were on their own. Their efforts to support the family were no longer just temporary responsibilities. Fenn Garrison had to find better paying, steady work.

On March 25, 1931, the Chicago Daily Tribune published a want ad for a commercial artist at Crescent Engraving Company, "Artist, lettering, designing, and illustrating; only first class men. Apply Art Director, Crescent Engraving Co., 162 West Harrison Street." Sixteen-year-old Fenn Garrison was hired as a staff artist. At first he only did lettering, but eventually he was promoted to drawing fashion models for mail order clothing catalogs. No artist at Crescent Engraving were allowed to sign their work, so his first illustrations that appeared in print were only recognized by him.

In 1924, a second tragedy struck the family. The youngest brother, Elmer Garrison, died at the age of eight in Chicago. After his death, Fenn Garrison, age 19, was more determined than ever to become a successful commercial artist. He redoubled his efforts to bring a happier future to his struggling mother and remaining siblings, Fannie, age 16, who changed his name to "Fred," Edward, age 15, and Albert, age 11.

FUNERAL SERVICES
August F. Englehardt
(1844 - 1912)
188 x 140 cm.
27" x 22"; oil on wood; The Library Dept. of Library Life

SLICKMINGE
W. Glendale Smith
(1876 - 1932)
Gouache on paper
20" x 14"; Glass (4x6)

COUPLE IN COFFEE HOUSE
Fitz Hugh L. Evans
(1875 - 1952)
Oil on board
22" x 18"; Glass (4x6)

SCHUCHNUHR STUDIOS LTD.

1605 N. Rodney St. Wilmette, IL 60091

E-Mail: studios@juno.net www.schuchnuhrstudios.com

Illustrations by Howard Pyle and his students American Illustrators

Artistic sketch for a story illustration in Compositions, circa 1930s. Photo courtesy of Illustration House, NY.

He left his small-but-steady salary as a staff artist at Crescent Engraving and started to look for work as a freelance artist, which was unpredictable, but potentially higher paying. He devoted all his time to emulating the top artists that were popular in Chicago during this period, to fill his portfolio with impressive samples. He decided to drop the name Foujita, and to instead use the Americanized version of his middle name, Hanna, which is "John." To respect the memory of his father's name, he created a different version of his family name, Bougħanam, to invent a new name for his art career, "John Gannam."

Thanks to his portfolio of derivative samples, "John Gannam" received his first freelance assignments from the Grauman Studio, a popular Chicago art agency on the 19th floor of the towering Stevens Building at 17 North State Street. But each new ten-dollar assignment was a frightful challenge, because he had to create a new design of his own, and could no longer rely on his skills as a copyist. After two years of freelance jobs, he was ready for the bigger leagues.

According to the artist, "Anyway, in 1926, at the age of 21, I decided to take a chance and, with my samples, went to Detroit, and to my surprise I got a very good job in a large art service. There I did every kind of commercial art." He worked for the Gray-Garfield & LaDriere Art Agency, at 25 Parsons Street and Woodward Avenue. William Todd Gray was president, Hubert L. Garfield was vice president and treasurer, and Claude J. LaDriere was company secretary. John Gannam lived at the Gethsemane Hotel, at 3755 Jekha Street in Detroit. The artist recalled, "A friend told me to demand $200 a week salary. You know that was one of the hardest things I ever tried to do. It's not easy to say 'two-hundred dollars' when you're not used to it. But I managed to do it. The silence that followed made me worried! I could hardly keep from gathering up my samples and running away before the police came to throw me out! But things were not as bad as

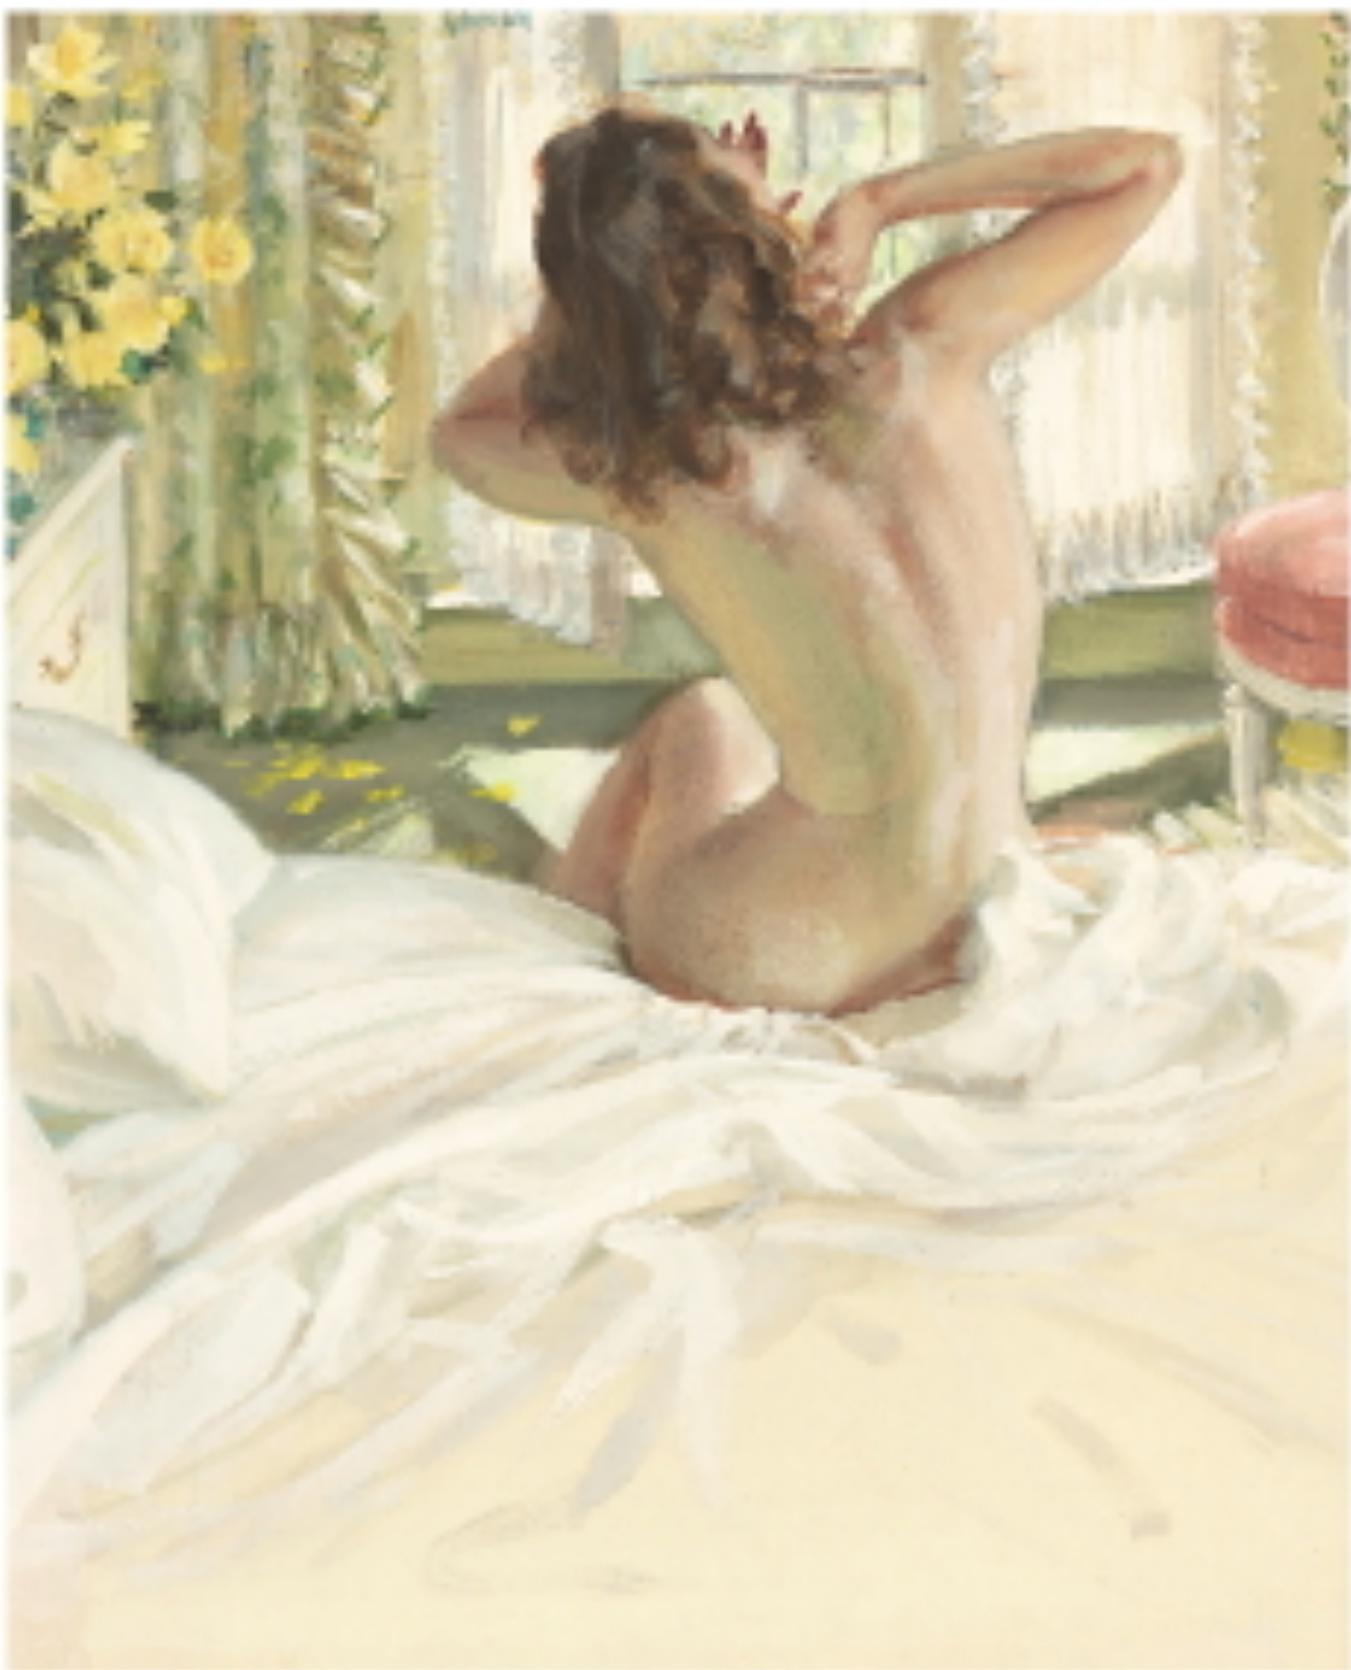

Illustration: Anna Zelená

Attributed illustration to Ruthie Nuss, 1955. Swimsuit and glasses on board. 12" x 16"

Photo courtesy of Ruthie Nuss, Nuss

Awaiting Illustration by Pacific Northwest EHR Educator and graphic artist, Mary Nichols of MaryNicholsArt.com

Advertising Illustration for St. Mary's Blankets in Ladies' Home Journal, October 1949

they appeared. I was offered $1.25 to start, with the promise of the higher figure a bit later. Having got the job, my next worry was to hold it. But a miracle happened. Yes, it was really amazing the way my skills blossomed out of that Detroit workshop. Every drawing I touched came out beautifully. All my desperate struggles appeared to have suddenly come to an end."

The Detroit company had long-running contracts with Essex automobiles, Chrysler Motors, Dodge trucks and automobiles, as well as General Electric appliances, and Hoover vacuum cleaners. John Gammie did line art, washes, and dry brush, but most of his assignments were only for black and white reproduction. Nevertheless, his advertising illustrations were all boldly signed, and they were published in the nation's biggest magazines: the Saturday Evening Post, House Beautiful, McCall's, and Leisure Home Journal.

After three years in Detroit, John Gammie had enough exposure, reputation, and contacts to quit the art agency and work as a freelance artist. In 1929, he was 25 years old when he returned to Chicago as a new and noteworthy freelance artist. He lived and worked at home with his mother and three brothers at 5329 Jackson Boulevard.

John Gammie had achieved his childhood dream to become a wealthy commercial artist. He could afford to support his family, and he was a rising star in the world of magazine advertising. But then suddenly on October 29, 1929, the stock market crashed and the national banking system collapsed, without which American industries were devastated. The once extravagant industry of advertising suddenly faced hard times. Rather than resting on his laurels, John Gammie was driven to achieve even greater success to protect his mother and family from the looming hardships of the Great Depression.

On April 4, 1938, a U.S. Census worker visited the Gammie family home. The widowed mother, Nellie Gammie, was recorded to be 47 and unemployed. Her immigration status was an alien citizen of Turkey with first papers. The head of the family was John Gammie, 24, who worked as a commercial artist. His legal status was an alien citizen of Turkey.

Taraba Illustration Art

Wake up and smell the coffee...

Original American illustration art is a great value!

T
taraba
I
Illustration
A
Artwork by John Gammie, Seattle, WA, 1946 (1946)

Ph: 307-358-2517 Cell: 307-253-5345

fred@tarabaiLLUSTRATIONart.com

Artwork by John Gammie, Seattle, WA, 1946 (1946)

Guy Buffet, circa 1930s. Gouache on board. Photo courtesy of Illustration House, NY

Gary Iliff/Photo, Steve Hill

Color study, circa 1940s. Tempera and gouache on board. Photo courtesy of Illustration House, NY

without papers. Fred Garrison was 22. He was a radio engineer and was also listed as an alien citizen of Turkey without papers. Edward Garrison was 19, and a clerk at a wholesale jewelry company. He was a native-born U.S. Citizen. Albert Garrison was 17, and a clerk at a radio company. He was also a native-born citizen. It is interesting that by 1930, the career of "John Garrison" had earned an impressive reputation as a commercial artist, and yet in the census of his family home he was only "John Garrison," the Turkish citizen with no legal papers. This unsettled identity continued to undermine his sense of security for years to come.

His first big break was to sell a cover painting for the March 7, 1931 issue of Collier's, which featured "Gunfight Trail," a Western novel by Alan Le May. After that painting appeared on Collier's, John Garrison was in demand, and he stayed in demand for the rest of his life. He never again needed to solicit work.

A few months later, in June of 1931, he left the midwest and moved to New York City, where he lived at 148 East 47th Street in midtown Manhattan. He was listed in the NYC Business Directory as "John J. Gannan." Three months after his arrival, he began to illustrate stories for the Woman's Home Companion. Often soon arrived from Cosmopolitan, The Ladies' Home Journal, and too many other nationally-distributed magazines for him to accept all the assignments. Their names were added to a waiting list for over two years. Along with story illustrations, he also painted covers for the Saturday Evening Post, McCall's, The American, Woman's Home Companion, Ladies' Home Journal, and Collier's.

A part of his good fortune was the fact that he was a brand new member of the elite club of "top illustrators." Although the slick magazine industry was in serious trouble in 1932, they still needed to produce issues, and those issues had to be filled with celebrated authors and artists that reflected the magazine's high class aesthetics. So at the same time that more established "top illustrators" were being asked to accept lower fees, John Gannan was only an entry level "top illustrator" with commensurate prices, which made him even more attractive to cost-conscious editors.

In the autumn of 1933, John Gannan moved to 49 East 8th Street, a four-story tenement in Greenwich Village. He occupied the first two floors, which came with a backyard, while the upper floors were leased to two other new tenants, Walter Baumhofer (1904-1987) and his wife Almeda Leach Baumhofer (1905-1995).

One indication of John Gannan's successful rise in the status of a celebrity illustrator was his inclusion in a 1933 group exhibition at the Grand Central Galleries, which was reviewed by the New York Times art critic Edward Alden Jewell in his story, "Billed American Illustrators Display Their Craft," published on November 4, 1933.

On May 9, 1934, John Gannan applied to join the private club, The Society of Illustrators of New York, at 128 East 63rd Street. His membership was proposed by Irving Nanck (1894-1983) and Warren Baumgartner (1894-1963). He was immediately approved for membership to rub elbows with Charles Dana Gibson (1867-1944), James Montgomery Flagg (1877-1960), Norman

FRIDAY - SATURDAY - SUNDAY
APRIL 22-24, 2016

WINDY CITY

PULP & PAPER CONVENTION

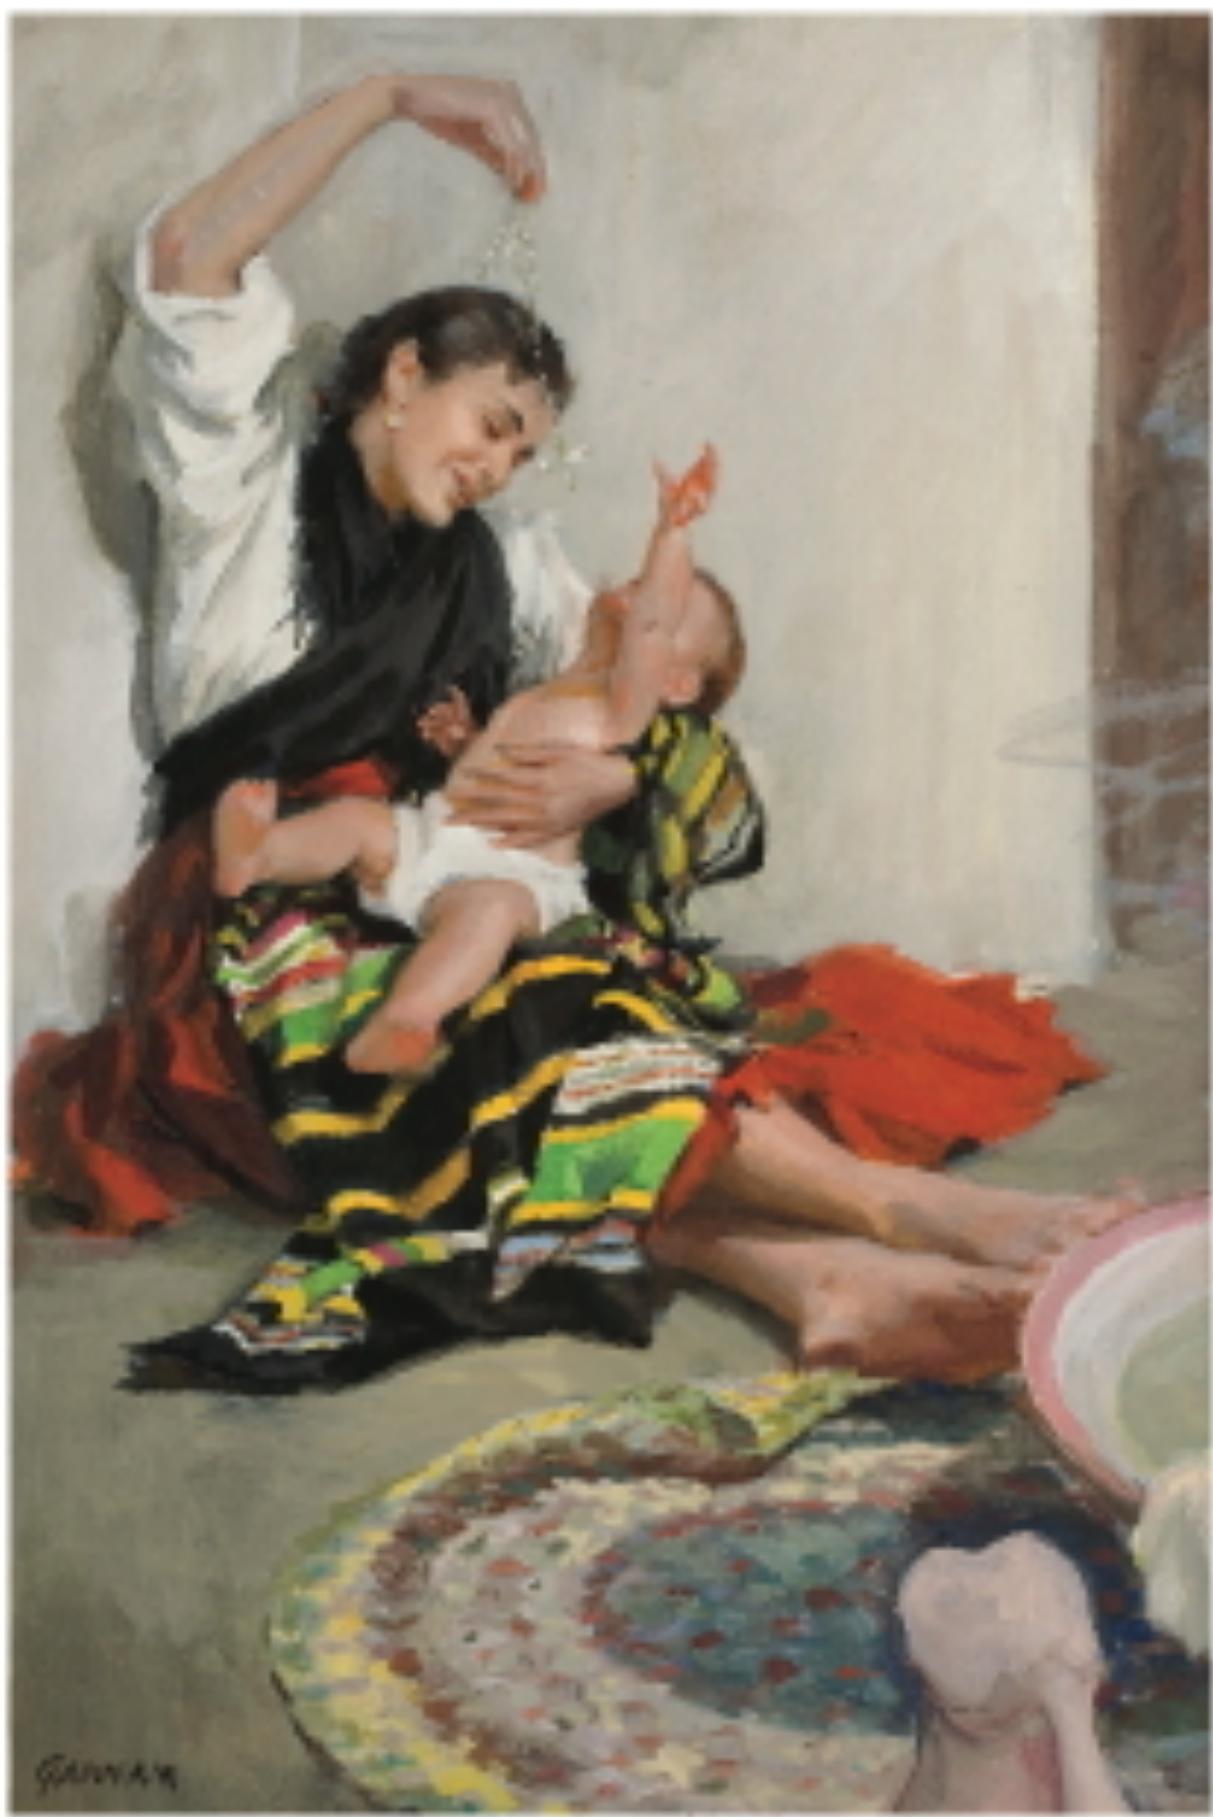

With the return of the Jerry Siegel and Joe Shuster comic book series
AMAZING STORIES
With the Return of the Pulp Masters
16

PULPS • PAPERBACKS
AUCTIONS • ART • FILM
MOVIE FESTIVAL • SF
POPULAR CULTURE

Art Show Sponsored by
Illustration Magazine

1000 Main Lombard, Yorktown Heights, NY
99 Washington Shopping Ctr.
Westchester, NY 10590
914-968-8881
100-200-1000-2000
www.illustrationmagazine.com
13 South St., Chappaqua, New York 10516
914-265-74241
info@illustrationmagazine.com
www.illustrationmagazine.com

Baby Illustration, circa 1940s. Inscribed on lower left: 23.87 x 18". Photo courtesy of Heritage Auctions, Dallas

Harry Whittaker, circa 1940s

Advertising illustration in the Intervale Evening Post, November 11, 1942

Mary Blair illustration, circa 1940s. Gouache on board, 14.8" x 10.5". Photo courtesy of Heritage Auctions, Dallas.

Story Illustration, circa 1940s

Advertising illustration, circa 1940s

Advertising illustration, circa 1940s

Bockwell (1894-1978), Al Dorne (1896-1965), Frank Reilly (1896-1987), Steven Dohanos (1907-1994), Harvey Dunn (1884-1952), Walter Biggs (1886-1968), and most of the other top illustrators of the day.

On August 30, 1936, John Gunnar married Dorothy F. Marvin. She was born in 1915 in NY. They moved to an apartment at 495 West 132nd Street and Amsterdam Avenue in Upper Manhattan.

As soon as the economy grew healthier, the advertising industry was back on its feet and knocking at the door of John Gunnar's studio. His specialty soon shifted from illustrating stories and covers of the glamorous magazine to the more lucrative field of advertising art. He developed long-term relationships with Texaco Oil, Pacific Mills, Chevrolet automobiles, Munsell carpets, Sparto toothpaste, St. Mary's Blankets, Saks Fifth Avenue hats, the Mutual Life Insurance Company, and the United States Brewers Foundation.

On February 7, 1938, the New York Times published an advertisement for the Grand Central School of Art, "Study illustration with Harvey Dunn, Walter Biggs, and John Gunnar. Classes Afternoon, Evening, and Sunday." The Grand Central School offered the world's highest level of training for professional illustrators. A portfolio of published illustrations was required for admission to the school, which was on 42nd Street and Vanderbilt Avenue, in the sunny sky-lit penthouse of the bustling Grand Central train station. Access to the classrooms was available through a special elevator located behind the entrance to Track 23.

On May 7, 1938, John and Dorothy Gunnar had a son, John Gunnar, Jr., born in NYC.

On November 25, 1938, the New York Times real estate section reported John Gunnar had leased an art studio apartment at 39 West 67th Street. Albert B. Ashforth was the broker. Nine weeks later, the artist left that studio and rented a bigger studio at 33 West 67th Street, where his neighbors included Arthur William Rosca (1881-1966), Wladyslaw Troster-Szende (1873-1948), John LaGatta (1894-1977), and Charles DeFee (1891-1978).

BAGS Unlimited®

COLLECTION PROTECTION SUPPLIES for:

Illustration

Registration

MYSTERY CARTOON

PULP

35

COMIC

- Sleeves
- Backings
- Frames
- Boxes
- Mailers

1-800-762-2247

www.BagsUnlimited.com

Eddy Illustration, circa 1950s

Eddy Illustration, circa 1950s

Story illustration, circa 1930s (see also inset). Photo courtesy of Tenina Illustration Art

Erte illustration, circa 1940s

Guy Illustrations, from H&B

Illustration, circa 1940s

Story Illustration, circa 1940s

Advertising illustration for Packard Motor Company, 1941.

John Gannan was a perfectionist. His cared less for art directors' deadlines than the pride in having done his best work. He was most renowned for his watercolors, which he executed with a mastery that rivaled John Singer Sargent (1856–1925). He was a member of the American Watercolor Society, and was elected to the National Academy of Design, where annual exhibitions regularly included his watercolors. He believed, "Imagination is what distinguishes an artist from a mechanician." He conceived his imagination to develop a strong visual recall with a painterly intuition that strove for perfection. "Observation is more searching when it is acting for the memory than when used for direct painting. You can't paint them while you look. You much changes too fast. You remember them. When I sketch I try to get the impression. Try to fix it in my mind, then go home and record it. I add to my sketches word descriptions, which have a tremendous power for fixing a visual impression." He imagined compositions of brilliant sunlight with broad impressionist effects, rather than meticulous details. He reduced his scenes to simpler forms. He put more time into preparatory studies because they were more fun to do, but even his execution of the final painting was 75% spontaneously creative. He started with rough sketches in pencil or pastel to invent an appealing composition, which he refined to a compulsive degree. After he had finally settled on a composition, he brought in models to explore the various graceful poses of the figure. He used photography as a handy tool, but he sought to improve upon the lens. He followed the unpredictable schedule of his creative urges. While concentrating on his work, he needed to be free of interruptions, in pursuit of which he would often remain in his studio for two works at a time, while meals and cigarettes were silently left in the hallway outside his studio door by a delivery service.

Advertising illustration for Pork-Wife Company, 1941.

According to Arthur William Brown, "Johnny is a modest person, but I know the reason for his success. First, he's sincere. Second, he's a perfectionist. No illustration leaves his studio unless it's the very best he can do. I've known him to do his paintings over and over again before he is satisfied, and he probably did dozens of preliminary sketches before starting the final picture. I once asked him, 'What are your hobbies?' He wanted to know 'What are hobbies?' I told him. 'They are the things that interest you after your work is done.' Well," he said, "my work may be my hobby. It takes me day and night to do, and it's the most important and exciting thing in my life."

This intense dedication to perfection undoubtedly helped him to produce many astonishing watercolor illustrations, which supported his family in Chicago. On January 12, 1948, the U.S. Census recorded his mother as an unemployed widow of 57, living at 221 North Lacey Avenue. She lived with her two youngest sons, Edward Gannon, a millman of 29, and Albert Gannon, a bartender of 27. John Gannam's commitment to his studio work also helped to provide for his wife and child in NYC, but it was probably not the best way to raise a two-year-old. By April of 1948, the marriage of John and Dorothy Gannon had grown estranged, so they decided to be amicably divorced, although it was most likely less than "amicable" for their son, John Gannon, Jr.

On May 31, 1958, the New York Times real estate section reported, "John Gannon, illustrator, has signed a ten-year lease for an apartment in Castle

Guy Buffet, circa 1946

Village of Washington Heights." Located on the western shore of upper Manhattan, at 148 Cabrini Avenue and 183rd Street, Castle Village is a development complex of five apartment buildings, each of which is 13 stories high. The entire perimeter is surrounded by a stone wall, with 40-foot-high decorative castle turrets facing the Hudson River.

On July 17, 1948, the New York Times published the legal notice, "As I am liberally providing for the necessities of all my dependents, I will not be responsible for any obligations unless contracted for by me personally; John Gannam, 148 Cabrini Avenue, New York City."

The 1942 New York City telephone directory listed Mrs. Dorothy Gannam as a resident of the Henry Hudson Road at 383 West 57th Street, near Broadway. She and her son remained at that listing for three years, until they left Manhattan and moved to 188-58 71st Street in Forest Hills, Queens, NY.

During World War II, the only family member to serve in the war was the American-born brother, Edward Gannam. He was drafted into the Army in 1945, and was honorably discharged as a Private in 1946. Meanwhile, the famous artist John Gannam was in the eyes of the law an alien resident named Fouzi Hassan Gannam, of Turkish citizenship, with no legal papers.

The June 1944 issue of American Artist magazine published a thoughtful and flattering six-page article on John Gannam, written by Ernest W. Watson (1884-1969).

In May of 1945, John Gannam rented a home in Salisbury, Connecticut, where he spent six months studying the effects of sunlight flickering over the rippling surface of the Housatonic River. The May 1947 issue of True Magazine published a three-page article, "John Gannam: 'Salah' the Housatonic," about his outdoor experience standing midstream in hip waders, to paint watercolors of fly fishermen in Salisbury, Connecticut.

In April of 1949, the gallery at the Society of Illustrators of New York held an exhibition of original works by John Gannam. The press release for the show was written by Frederick Newlin Price (1883-1969), the director of the prestigious Ferargil Art Galleries, at 65 East 57th Street, NYC:

Harry Bertoia, circa 1940s

© Illustration Advertising Illustration for Maytag Washers, 1950. Gouache on board, 17" x 22". Photo courtesy of Maytag Home Goods, Marion.

"In this exhibition, you will find almost two hundred original paintings. These are oils and watercolors, and of course, the coke satiny panels that advertisers pay very well for, and which the artist has brought to a perfection seldom attained. Zero hour for John Gannan was a day in 1905. Lebanese, Syrian. There were no trace of art, architecture, music, or sculpture in his forebears. He is a little bold, a little serious, but smiling and his voice is friendly plus. Now from zero he is in Manhattan, signed up two years ahead. Buys a house in Nyack, sells it, buys another in Provincetown, etc., but comes back to 35 West 67th Street, the hermit of his art. He was married once, divorced, a child of ten. No interests, a sweet sort of desire for all. He never thinks of a picture to frame.

He likes Sargent, Whistler, Ryder, Homer, and gives a deep authentic bow to the French Impressionists. Once he took a half year in Salisbury, Connecticut, and studied the light on the water. The waves of light ever changing as the stream goes down to the sea. The hermit never really knows how to hunt, how to fish, but he can seek into his memory book and show you America and American folks."

On February 28, 1897, John Gannan finally legally changed his name and applied for Naturalized Alien U.S. Citizenship. He listed his date of birth as May 24, 1865, and his home address as 35 West 67th Street.

On September 16, 1897, his mother died at the age of 74 in Chicago.

On June 15, 1959, the Long Island Star-Journal reported the artist's 21-year-old son, "Airmen John Gannan Jr., of 108-50 71st Street, Forest Hills, has been assigned to a unit of the Tactical Air Command at Nellis Air Force Base in Nevada, for training and

Roy Sargent, 1942

Harry Iltis, c. 1960

Harry Iltis, c. 1960

duty in still photography. He completed his basic training there." This was vitally important training in the Cold War era of Sputnik, and the covert operation of U-2 spy planes.

In 1961, John Gannan left NYC and moved to the village of Sandy Hook, in New Haven, Connecticut, where he lived on Gedding Hill Road.

On November 7, 1961, his youngest brother, Albert Gannan, died suddenly at the age of 48 in Chicago.

In 1962, John Gannan became an art teacher at the National Institute of Art and Design, a correspondence school located in suite 847 in the Carnegie Hall Building on 57th Street, above the famous NYC concert hall. The school had recently been founded by Frank Reilly, who told the press, "When you are preparing for a career in art, there are two choices for your ultimate goal—fine art or commercial art. Quite understandably, commercial art is where most of the job opportunities are—advertising agencies, art services, newspapers, magazines, books, television, motion pictures, department stores, greeting cards, calendars, printers, industrial plants, direct mail, and outdoor sign companies. To get a chance at these jobs, you can either submit a portfolio of your work to the art directors or join an art agency to get you jobs. Some jobs will be full-time and some will be freelance, which means you will be able to work at home or in your studio. When you're starting out, you shouldn't turn down any job that's offered, because you never know where the job will lead if they like your work, and in the final analysis, good art is when people like your work. Naturally, not all art is great art, because the great talents of Michelangelo, Rubens, and Picasso are gifts from God. But be that as it may, these are opportunities in art where even without the spark of genius one can build a career that is intensely satisfying."

In 1965, John Gannan also joined the art staff of the Darien Academy of Arts in Darien, CT, and he was also appointed a member of the schools Board of Directors.

Shy, anxious, and soft-spoken, John Gannan was a unique art teacher. One account of his approach to teaching was provided by Arthur William Brown: "John and I have been friends for a great many years. Around ten years ago I felt I was getting dated and in a rut, and he got me out of it with his sympathetic criticism and help. He made me simplify and get more contrast in my work, and in many other ways, he got me interested again."

Bury Burdette, 1940s

According to the artist Kenneth Webster Thompson (1907-1996):

"Some years ago I chaired a series of lectures at the Society of Illustrators. I had Johnny scheduled one evening and he hated it. He claimed he had nothing to say. His only courage was a tumbler of straight whiskey, which he kept just out of sight in the wings off stage. Frequently he politely excused himself, to supposedly clear his throat. His nasal grit voice was difficult to hear in the rear of the room. It became totally inaudible when he strayed from the microphone, so I finally forced him to hold onto the microphone stand, even when he walked back and forth to the wings. After a while, he began to lean on the stand, and since it was telescopic, it slowly began to get shorter, with Johnny following it down, still talking. He ended up bent way down with his head on the level with his knees and the studio audience howling with glee. What his pearly words of wisdom were at that time remain known only to his knees."

Advertising Illustration for Green-Nutts Company, 1940

(On January 17, 1965, the Bridgeport Sunday Post reported, "John Gannam, of Sandy Hook, quietly adjoined himself to Glen Hill Cereolescent Center in Danbury, CT. Admirers and friends could speed his recovery and boost his morale with a call or a card." Nine days later, on January 26, 1965, John Gannam died at the age of 39. He was survived by his son, John Gannam, Jr., as well as his two younger brothers, Fred Gannam and Edward Gannam.

According to the address given by the artist Charles Hovey (1909-1989) at the 1981 induction to the Society of Illustrators Hall of Fame:

"My favorite story about John concerned an honorary dinner at the Society for Bill Chouman, when he left Collier's. All of us who drew pictures for 'Chess' were there.

Gannam was noted for his paintings of beautiful women, but he was invariably hired by Chouman to paint horses in Westerns. After all the tearful-and-otherwise speeches about Chouman had been made, our hero rose to his full five-foot-four stature and made the keynote speech of the evening: 'I always thought Chouman was a son-of-a-bitch, and I still think so! We will not see the likes of John Gannam again.' ■

© 2006 by David Saunders

David Saunders is an artist and art historian living in New York.

Thanks to John Gannam, Jr., for his assistance with this article. Thanks also to the New Britain Museum of American Art, for contributing the many fine sheets reproduced in this issue. Thanks also to Heritage Auctions, HA.com, TenSpeedIllustrationArt.com, IllustrationRussia.com for additional photographs of original paintings. And thanks, special thanks, to Steve Risch for his encouragement, and to Richard Bernstein of the Society of Illustrators.

Illustration by the United States Brewer's Foundation, 1950. Gouache on board, 28" x 38". Photo courtesy of Heritage Auctions, Dallas.

THE

FEBRUARY 1915

10 CENTS

MASSSES

"A DAUGHTER OF THE REVOLUTION"
BY JOHN REED

FRANK WALTS
H.

THE INVISIBLE FRANK WALTERS

by John Witck

Readers who are interested in the confluence of art and radical politics in the first half of the 20th century will almost certainly encounter the name Frank Walts (or Frank M. Walts, as he often signed his work). Walts was an illustrator and graphic designer who created dozens of covers for important, left-leaning magazines such as The Masses, The Liberator, and The Cross—the official house organ for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Getting to know Frank Walts poses a problem, however, because despite a growing interest in his images, next to nothing was ever written about him. The few references that do turn up usually describe Walts as an important African-American illustrator about whom little is known. He's been invisible for decades, even in our own age of fast and easy information.

It's hard to believe that the story of Frank Walts remains to be told, but the most that's ever been written about him is one slim paragraph by political cartoonist Art Young, in his 1928 memoir My Way. In a chapter remembering the activists who attended The Masses' editorial meetings in Greenwich Village, Young observed:

Frank Walts, the son of an Indiana preacher, was a regular. Walts traversed New York with a peri and sketchpad, as eager for pictorial subjects as a hunter for game. He made many striking and artistic cover designs. Solitary, particular, uncompromising, eccentrically doing posters for the theater, this boy Walts interested me. He devised a pair of spectacles by which he could look straight ahead and yet see what was behind him. He invented a foam-tail brush, preferring it to a pen for drawing.

A single paragraph isn't much to go on, but the words "Indiana preacher" are promising. Ultimately, they lead to the 1880 United States Census, and a Methodist-Episcopal minister named Jacob K. Walts, residing with his wife and children in Lima Township, La Grange County, Indiana. The census also notes that the Reverend and Mrs. Walts were the parents of siblings Lawrence and Elizabeth, and of their younger brother, Franklin M. (Frankie) Walts, who was born on March 23, 1877.

And there's more. Under the column marked "Race" the census-taker had written a single word—"White."

Illustration for the Purdue University yearbook, The Spirit, 1897

Illustration for the Purdue yearbook purpleite, 1907

By the time Frank Wohl had entered college, his family had moved to Logansport, Indiana. Young Frank lived at home and attended classes at Purdue University, 48 miles away in West Lafayette. Like many other parts of his life, the details of Frank's youth remain unknown. We do know that he graduated from Purdue in 1897, with a Bachelor of Civil Engineering degree. In what may be the only images of Max that have come down to us, his yearbook, The Debris, shows him to have been a lean, handsome, neatly dressed young man. The yearbook also credits him with being one of its three Arts Editors.

As of February 1, 1905, Wohl was working as a draftsman for the Chicago City Railway Co., and earning a salary of $125 per month. Two years later, he had been promoted to the position of "Road Master" and was responsible for inspecting and maintaining a stretch of track originating at Chicago's State Street station. By 1910, he had found work in New York City as a railroad track "appraiser." When he registered for the draft in 1917, he was living on West 38th Street, and was employed as a mechanical draftsman by radio pioneer Emil J. Simek.

During his first years in New York, Wohl began to gain recognition as an artist. The September 9, 1914 issue of the New York Dramatic Mirror reported that his drawings were used to promote the Broadway plays Holy Week, Oscar, The Tontine, A Thousand Tears Ago and The Thirteenth Chair in the future, he would create posters for New York Theater Guild productions of František Langer's The Camel Through The Needle's Eye (1919), Minnow, a play by S. N. Behrman (1929), and George Bernard Shaw's The Doctor's Dilemma (1932).

Wohl's liberal politics brought him into contact with some of the leading artists and political cartoonists of his day. In 1914, he became a member of New York's first Society of幽默ists, and exhibited several paintings there. He made illustrations for a broad range of publications including Hyperion Monthly International Communist, Cahier's, and The New Yorker. He took his own art seriously and exhibited a number of his drawings at New York City's International Exhibition of Modern Art, the epochal 1913 Armory Show. One year later, he drew his first cover for The Masses.

ABOVE: Max Wohl, 1917

Poster illustration for The Camel Through the Needle's Eye, 1919

Book cover illustration for Meteo, 1929

The

MARCH, 1934

10 CENTS

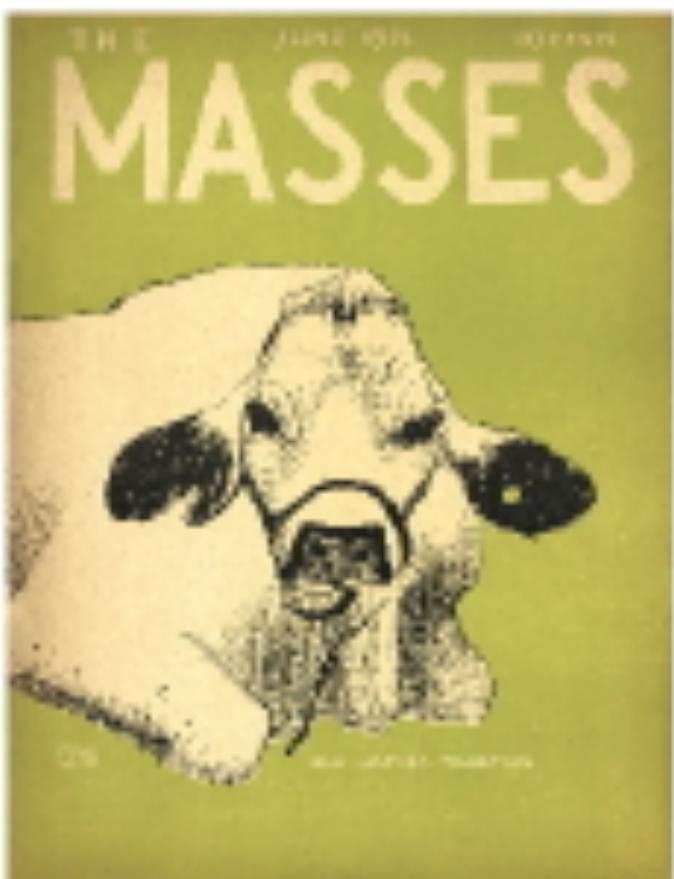

MASSES

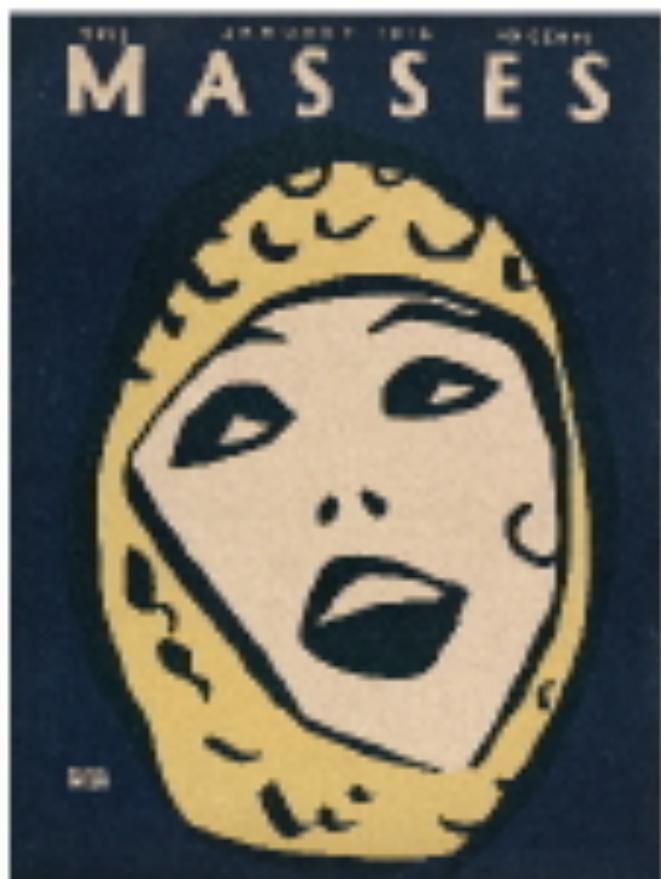

PAUL R. PITTMAN

HERBERT HARRIS CO.

10 CENTS

The Masses, June 1911

The Masses, January 1916

The Masses viewed politics and culture through a socialist lens and was one of the most graphically innovative magazines published in America. It attracted a group of talented letter writers, artists, and intellectuals, including Max Eastman, Haydon Carruth, Louis Untermeyer, John Sloan, Art Young, John Reed, Floyd Dell, George Bellows, Stuart Davis, and many others.

Walts' cover for the November 1914 issue was a fresh departure from the somber social realism that characterised many of the magazine's cartoons and illustrations. His semi-abstract portrait of a woman in a plumed hat is very simple, very bold, and much more modern than anything The Masses had published up to that time. Pretty ladies appeared on the covers of many magazines of the day, and Walts didn't hesitate to picture attractive, independent women in radical publications. His striking portrait of the actress Genda Holmes, for the December 1916 issue of The Masses, is an outstanding example of his lively, female imagery. The Masses would publish a total of 11 distinctive Frank Walts covers before the government shut the magazine down, charging that its editors had violated the Espionage Act of 1917 by obstructing military conscription.

The Masses, February 1916

THE

APRIL 1918

40 CENTS

MASSES

The Masses, December 1910

THE

MARCH 1917

$5 CASH

THE Masses

Books
Writings

THE CRISIS

The Crisis, September 1917

The year that Federal prosecutors brought The Moors' editors to court, 1917, also saw the first of Wiltzius' covers for The Crisis: A Record of the Darker Races, edited by the sociologist, writer, and philosopher W.E.B. Du Bois. Working mostly in heavy black crayon, Wiltzius ultimately produced ten notable Crisis covers in styles both realistic and experimental. His portrait of Blanch Deas for the September 1917 issue is important for depicting one of the first African-American actors to appear on the Broadway stage. Drawn from life with an emphasis on texture and shadow, the picture successfully captures its subject's very expression. Most of Wiltzius' other Crisis drawings shared the shadowy, stippled look of Deas' portrait.

Caricatures and cartoons were tremendously popular during Wiltzius' years with The Crisis, and some of its readers criticized him for creating what they considered to be unflattering caricatures of African-Americans. W.E.B. Du Bois took the opportunity to expose the hurt that lay beneath the criticism in an editorial that defended Wiltzius as his "thoughtful, clear-eyed artist."

Frank Wiltzius drew his last Crisis cover for the February, 1920 issue. By this time the magazine had

THE CRISIS

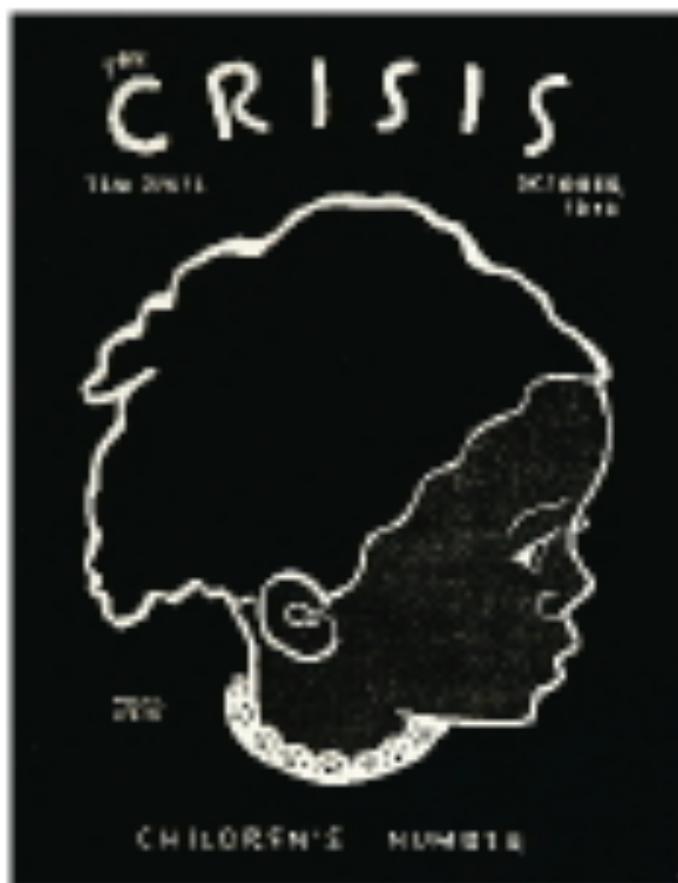

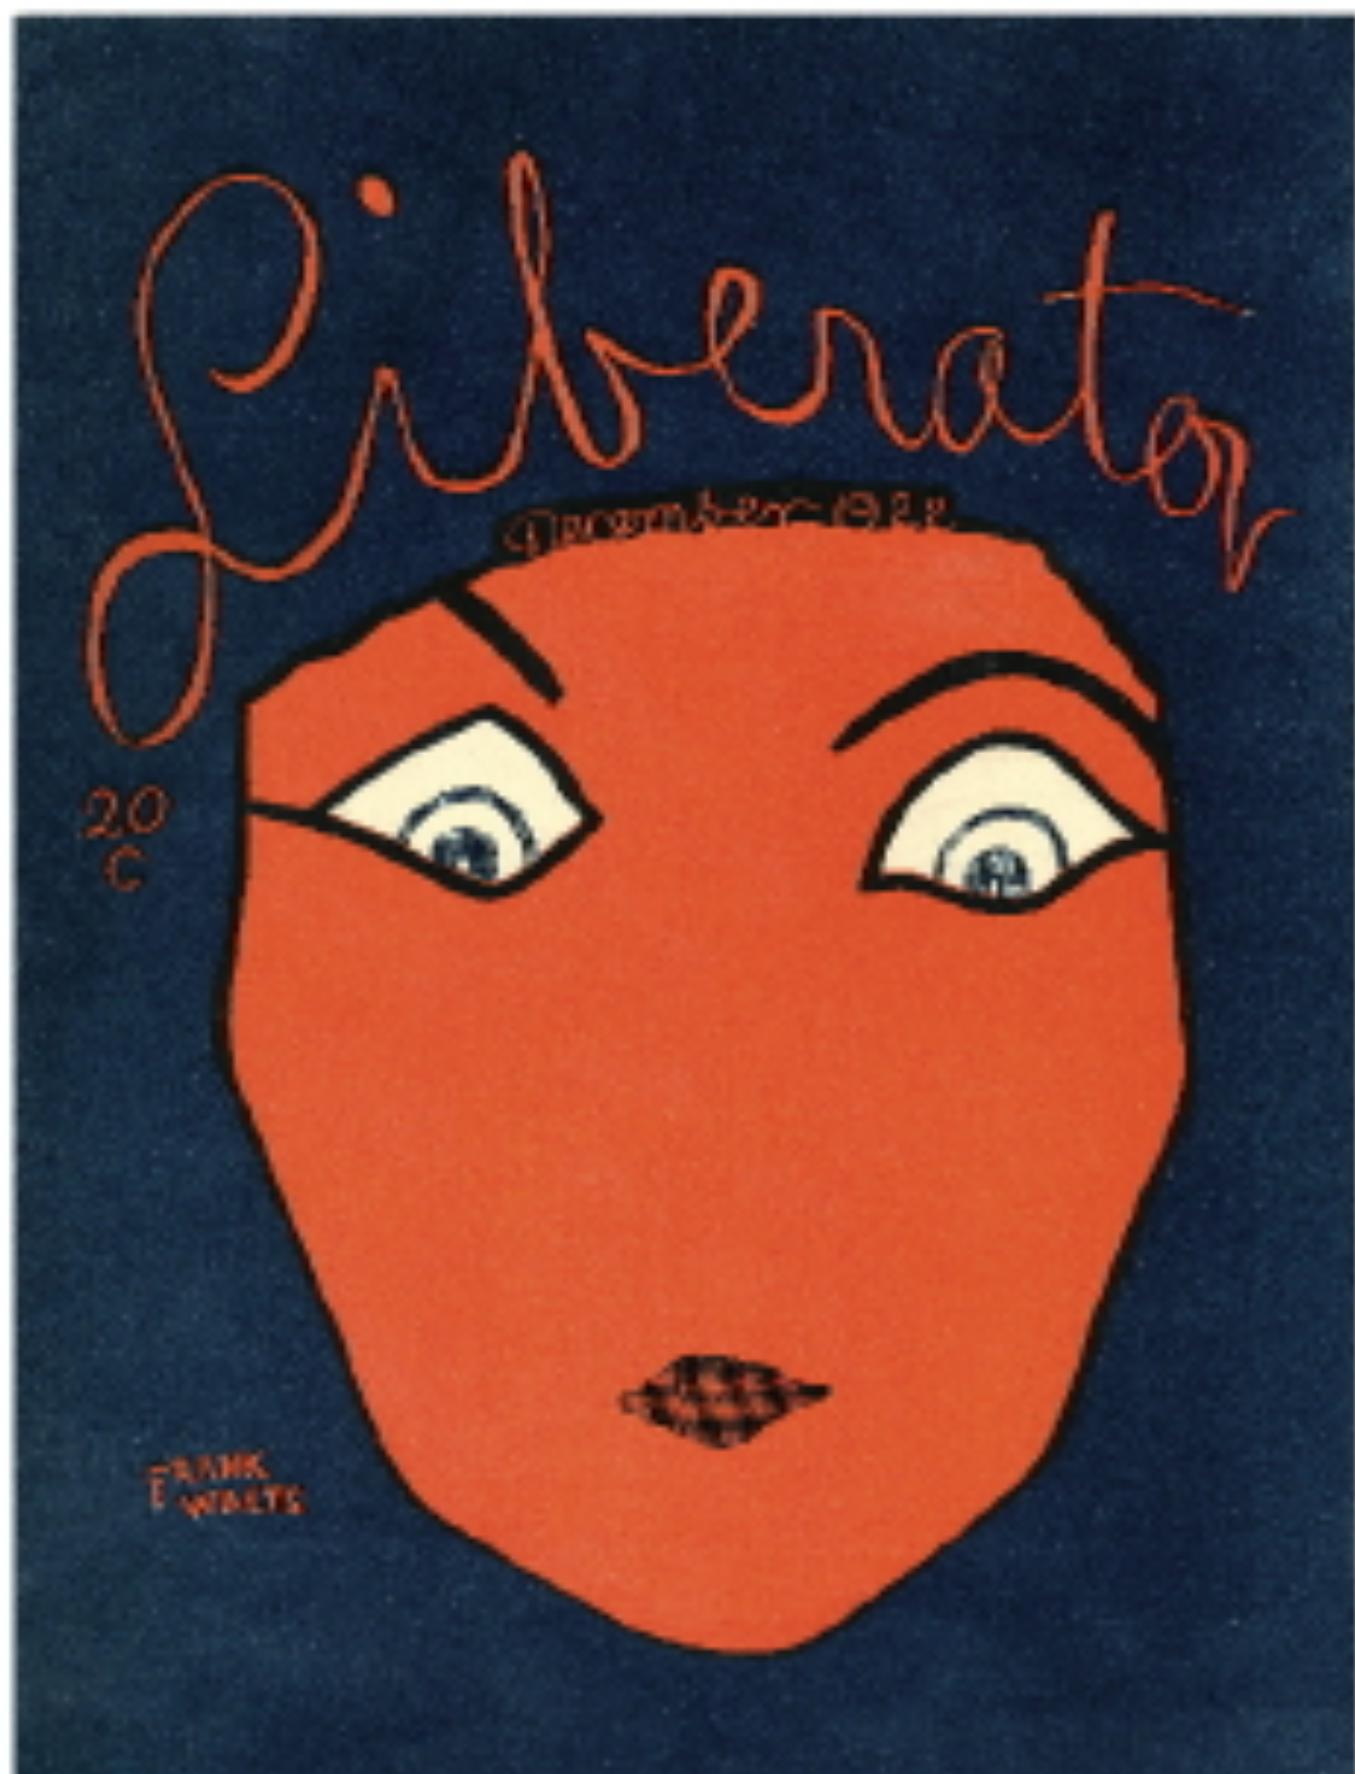

The Crisis, November 1917

CRISIS

The Crisis, September 1918

The Liberator, October 1962

LIBERATOR

FEBRUARY 1963

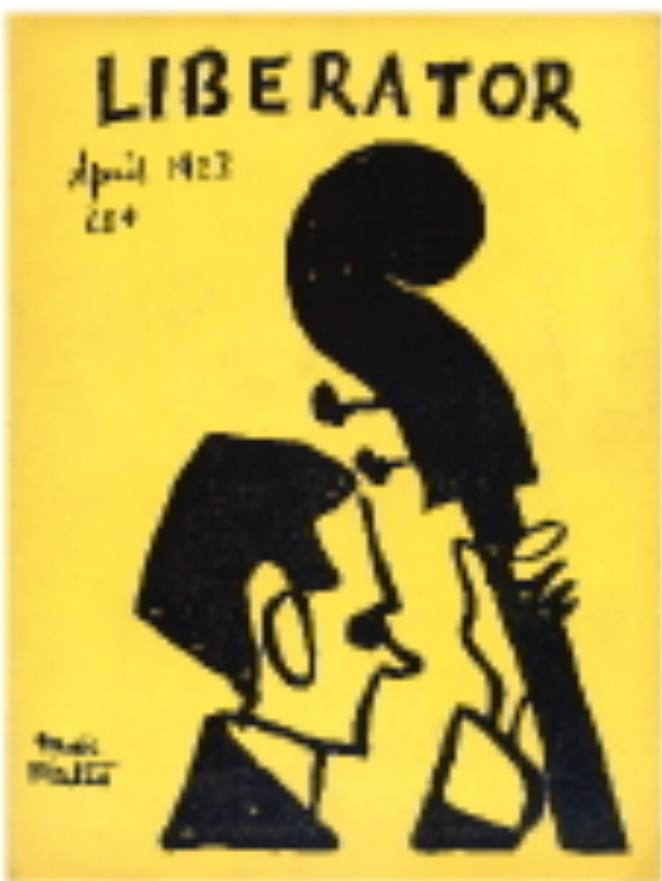

20¢

FRANK
WELLER

The Liberator, February 1963

© Illustration:

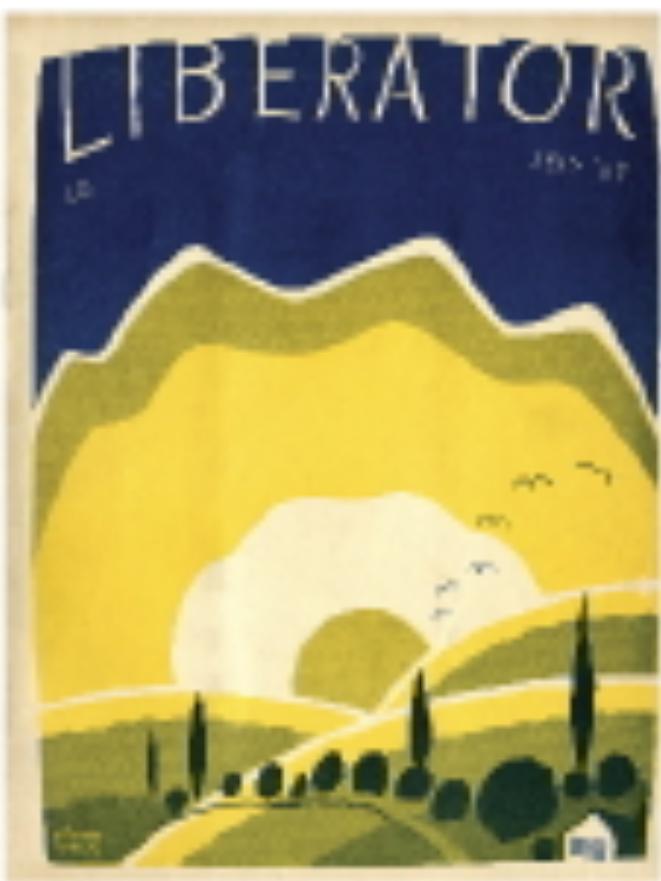

Ex Libris, April 1918

a circulation of roughly 100,000 readers, which was the largest audience his artwork would ever enjoy. The idea that Waller was black probably stems from his association with The Crisis and other African-American publications such as Copernicus. People saw his name on a cover or contents page and just assumed that he shared the magazine's racial identity.

After The Moran had gone out of business, it was succeeded by two new partisan publications: The Liberator and New Masses. Waller was an early Liberator contributor, starting with the cover for April 1918: a portrait of Anita Loos, author of Gentlemen Prefer Blondes. Nineteen months later, The Liberator published a second Waller cover, an untitled wood block print of a window framing a crescent moon and three bright stars.

By the fall of 1922, The Liberator had gone through a series of changes from which it emerged as the de facto house organ of the Communist Party of America. In retrospect, the magazine's shift to the extreme left may have liberated something in Waller, whose work was about to take off in several directions. An extraordinary cover for the December 1922 issue—an otherworldly orange female face—signaled a change. It was followed in rapid succession by a varied collection of covers for 1923, including: a snow white rooster against a black background crowing over a new year's hatching (January); a human-sized skull wearing a helmet marked "WAR" (February); a bass fiddle player sketched in black against a contrasting yellow background (April); pianist Ethylde Baker's profile sympathizing her bobbed red hair (May); a primitive-looking Queen; a fateful landscape at sunset (July); a portrait

Ex Libris, July 1922

Bodyslide design by Anita Loos

LIBERATOR

200

AUGUST 1923

The Liberator, September 1924

of socialist actress Edna Foster in Everywoman (August); and, in Wilts' own words, "a rendition of the Solar System with blue and white tones" (September).

As the '20s rolled on, Stalinist conformity stifled free expression at The Liberator, and Wilts probably sided with the disgruntled staffers who broke free to publish New Masses. The first issue of New Masses went on sale for .20 cents in May of 1926, and for several years the magazine maintained its identity as a repository of independent radical opinion. Wilts drew three covers for it between 1926 and 1928. The last of these carried the title "Union Square," indicating the New York City park where thousands of workers would clash with police over widespread unemployment associated with the Great Depression.

In May of 1930, two months after the Union Square riot had occurred, Wilts added his signature to those of 100 writers, educators and artists who signed a petition protesting the imprisonment of men and women for expressing political opinions, and "in war against 'Red Baiting'" which was becoming endemic in the U.S. As a result of signing the petition, his name was published in The Auf-

New Masses, August 1926

Nitroak by Elizabeth Kirkpatrick Dilling. Subtitled "A Who's Who of Radicalism for Patriots," the book was privately printed in 1934 to cast suspicion on those whom it accused of disloyalty and subversion. One can imagine that Frank Wilts, who participated in radical politics for decades, would have weathered a number of skirmishes with conservative challengers like Dilling. But we do not know anything of the kind because Wilts was, again, in the words of Art Young, "solitary."

When he died in Manhattan on January 21, [1941], he left no one behind to remember his accomplishments and preserve his memory. He was 64 years old and single.

The very next day, on January 22, 1941, after a brief service at the Frank Campbell Funeral Home in New York City, his body was removed to Ferncliff Cemetery in Ardsley, New York, where it was cremated. His ashes were subsequently transferred to the Underwood cemetery in Fort Wayne, Indiana, to rest beside his parents, brother, and sister. *

— by John Wilts, 2016

John Wilts is an Emmy Award-winning editor/producer of public television documentaries. His papers on history, politics and art history have appeared in numerous scholarly publications.

Fiction
Fact
Model
Buildings

Three Aviation Magazines in One!

FLYING ACES

SEPTEMBER 15¢

BATTLE IN ORIENTAL SKIES

THRILLING STORIES BY KEYHIDE, ARCHIBALD AND WHITEHOUSE
ARTICLES ON PURSUIT AVIATION TODAY AND TRANS-ATLANTIC AIR MAIL MODEL PLANS OF NORTHROP XFT-1 AND HI-CLIMB R.O.G.

Flying Aces, September 1941

Art Illustration:

Casimir Boles "Duke" Mayshark, 1937

CB. MAYSHARK

by David Saunders

Casimir Boles "Duke" Mayshark was born Casimir Macryszak-Mayshark, Jr., on January 3, 1872, in San Francisco, California. His father, Casimir Macryszak Mayshark, was born in 1840 in Poland, and came to the U.S. in 1863 to work in a commercial art in the advertising industry of San Francisco.

The family name Mayshark is an English transliteration of the Polish name in the Cyrillic alphabet, as U.S. immigration officials had to assign approximate phonetic equivalents. Other members of the same family who came to the U.S. were assigned various names of similar sounds, such as "Machcenyk," "Marenek," "Machensk," and "Marenek."

His mother, Anna Grace Page, was born in 1879 in Mississippi, so she was ten years older than her husband. She was also an artist. She studied at the School of Fine Art of the Women's Art Association of Memphis, located in the Randolph Building on Main and Beale Streets downtown. Her teachers were Mary Solari (1848-1921), Clara Schaefer (1877-1967), William Raines (1861-1956), and Costa Whiteman (1878-1932). After completing her studies in 1899, she designed and decorated Art Nouveau china. She opened her own art school in the Monroe Building on Jefferson and Third Streets, in Memphis. This was her second marriage. She had one child after one year when her husband, Percy Frank Wilson (1878-1906, the city editor of the Memphis News-Scimitar, died of typhoid fever on January 15, 1898.

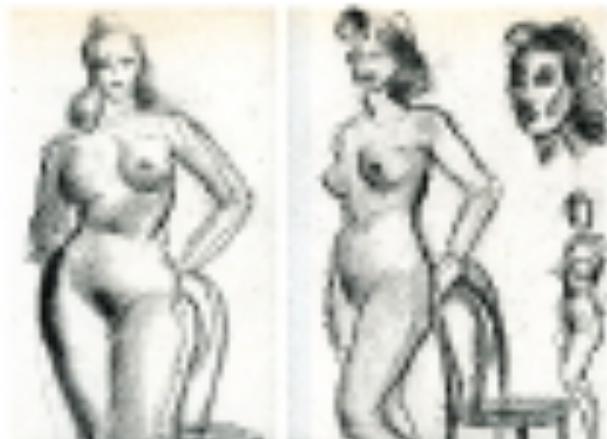

After his death, she left Memphis and moved to El Paso, Texas, to live with her brother, Robert W. Page (1872-1940). He was a successful writer and designer of advertising wire-hat brod with Omega in Memphis until 1904, when illness forced him to move to El Paso for the health benefits of a drier climate. According to the Memphis News-Scimitar, "Robert W. Page was known to the public as 'The Busy Ad Man.' His individual style was such that it made him famous throughout the South." While Drexel lived in El Paso, she supported herself by operating a private art school. Her hand-painted ceramics were featured in the May 1908 issue of the art magazine, Keramic Studio.

In 1908, she advertised art classes in the local newspaper. By 1916, she had moved to San Francisco, where she met and married Casimir Macryszak Mayshark on May 1, 1916. They had two children, Casimir Macryszak Mayshark, Jr. (b.1912), and his younger brother, James Page Mayshark, born June 5, 1913. The family lived at 178 28th Avenue.

On May 25, 1918, the San Francisco Call reported in the Arts Notes column by Peter Garsen, "Casimir M. Mayshark has recently shown a landscape at the Bohemian Club. This is the best panel picture that Mr. Mayshark, who has specialized in scenic decoration in European and English theaters, has exhibited here. It attracts the attention immediately by its personal quality, its quietness, and its altogether delightful point."

Childless marriage. Watercolor on paper, 11 x 16"

ABOVE: Nude studies, 1910s. Pastel on paper

In 1911, the San Francisco Hatch Club organized a poster contest to encourage more trade in the city's potato crop. St. Francis. On November 1, 1911, the San Francisco Call published the results of the contest. Casimir M. Mayshark was listed as an entered but failed to win the $500 prize, which went to the NYC artist Adolph Treidler (1886-1980).

In 1916, Casimir moved to El Paso, Texas, with his wife and two sons. They lived with his wife's family and Casimir worked as a manager of the Texile Systems outdoor advertising agency.

In 1923, the family moved again, this time to the East Coast so that Casimir could pursue his career as a commercial artist in New York City. They lived at 28 Van Dyke Place in Summit, New Jersey. Casimir commuted by ferry boat to the city, where he pursued his commercial artwork.

On September 11, 1918, CASIMIR M. MAYSHARK registered with the draft board. He listed his occupation as Poster Designer, and he was recorded to be of medium height, and slender build, with blue eyes, and brown hair. At the age of 26, married, and supporting two young sons, he was not selected for military service.

In 1918, the father deserted the family and was never heard from again. Casimir, Jr., who was seven and James was age six. After the marriage was legally dissolved, Casimir Marrymatus Mayshark, Jr. was renamed Casimir Benson Mayshark.

The mother, Anna Pugl, and her two sons moved to Chatham, New Jersey, where they lived at 212 Atlantic Avenue. She supported the family as a commercial artist, designing decorative wallpaper for a manufacturer.

The Mayshark family: Casimir A. Mayshark Sr., Anna, and James, 1918

CASIMIR A. MAYSHARK SR. AND HIS SON, 1919

Unknown to the family, the father had moved to Atlantic City, where he worked as a sign painter.

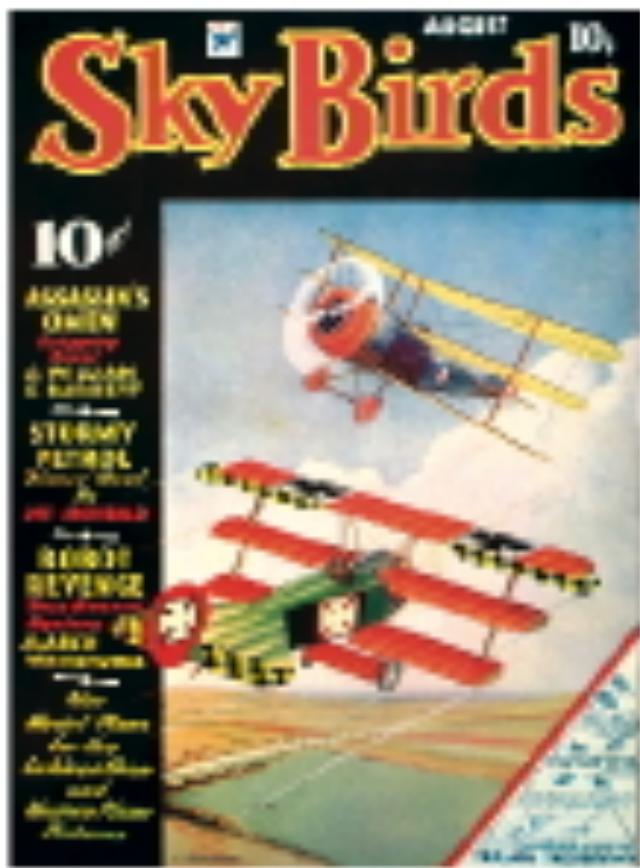

On September 13, 1928, Casimir M. Mayshark addressed the 11th Annual Convention of the Outdoor Advertising Association, held in Cleveland. One of his lecture topics was "Color in Outdoor Advertising."

In 1928, Casimir M. Mayshark married his second wife, Jose Whitney. She was born in 1899 in New Hampshire. They lived with her brother's family at 34 Turner Street in Boston, Massachusetts, where he worked as an Interior Designer. They had two children, Cyrus, born August 5, 1930, who grew up to become an author, and Mary, born May 5, 1936, who grew up to become Mrs. Mary Mayshark Perkins.

In 1929, the father, Casimir M. Mayshark, lived with his second wife and two children at 34 Conant Street in Roxbury, MA, but the following year he again deserted his family, leaving his second wife and two children behind. The marriage was soon legally dissolved.

In June of 1936, Casimir Benson "Duke" Mayshark graduated from Chatham High School. He had always liked to draw, but by high school he had become interested in a career as a commercial artist.

In 1941, he attended the University of Alabama, where he completed his freshman year. The Great Depression brought hard times to most American families, which made college difficult to afford. By 1942, his younger brother James Mayshark had graduated high school with a promising record in football and a dream to play in college, so C.B. "Duke" Mayshark entered the workforce instead of returning to Alabama for his sophomore year. His brother became a Flying fern. Asplenium (A.)

First time, September 1931

Paying Areas, November 2014

王家村，西漢中期

Flying Aces, April 2008

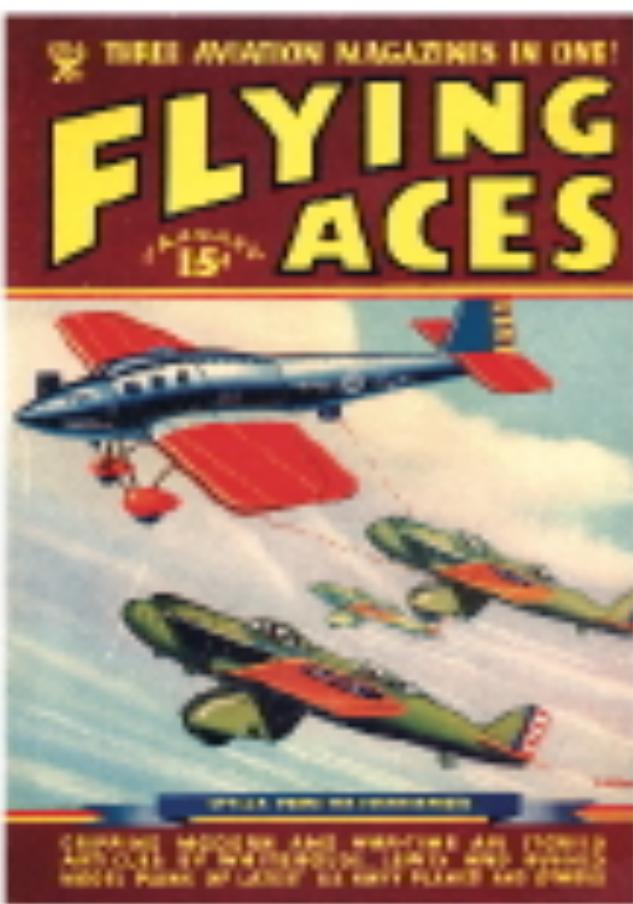

star player with the Mountain Hawks of Lehigh University in Bethlehem, PA.

In 1942, C.B. began to work as a commercial artist in NYC publishing and advertising. He attended night school art classes at the Art Students League at 215 West 3rd Street, where his most influential art teacher was Sierra Sargent (1886-1974).

In 1934, C.B. painted covers for the pulp magazines Sky Birds and Flying Aces. He also drew pen-and-ink interior story illustrations for these two titles. In addition, he wrote several descriptive articles about his cover paintings, which were published in the magazines. He signed his work for pulp magazines "C.B. Mayhark" or "C.B.M."

The New York City Business Directory of 1940 listed the art studio of C. B. Mayhark at 10 West 31st Street, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues.

In 1941, he was hired as a staff artist at the James M. Mathes Advertising Company in the prestigious Chanin Building at 122 East 42nd Street, where Steer & Smith, Mead Publishing, and Doctor Publications also had offices. While working at the Mathes Advertising Company, he met a clerical secretary, Helen Leslie Duaneay. She was born December 26, 1915, in

Flying Aces, January 1940

C.B. and Helen Duaneay, 1940

New York, New York, and was a graduate of Smith College.

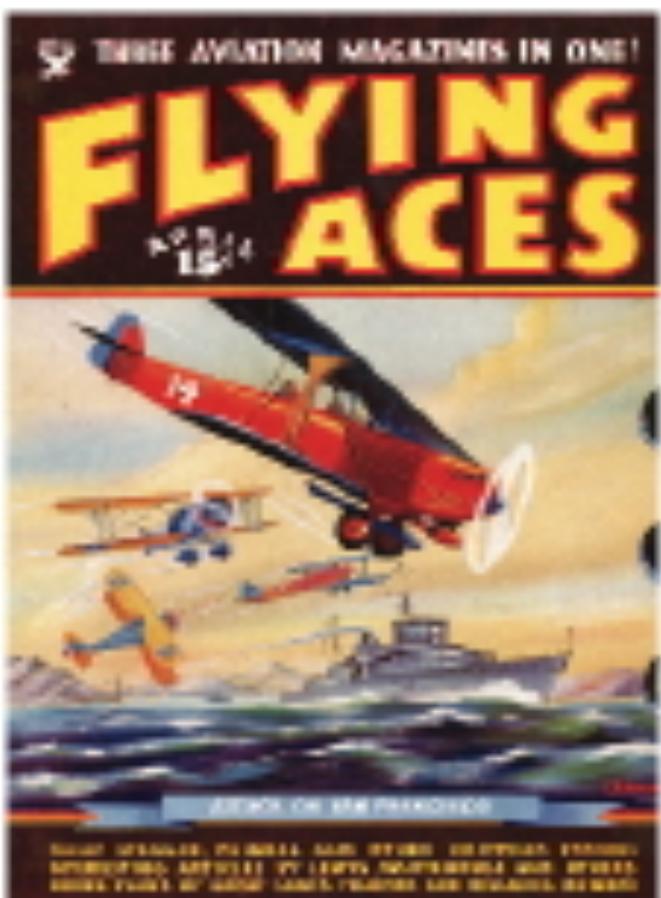

By 1941, his estranged father Casimir M. Mayhark had moved to San Diego, where he worked as a draftsman for the Simpson Construction Company at the San Diego Naval Training Station. He lived in a lodging house at 432 F Street.

In 1940, C. B. Mayhark was drafted. Before he entered military service he married Helen Leslie Duaneay. They eventually had three children, Joseph (b.1944), Cassandra (b.1946), and Sanford (b.1950). The family lived in Forest Hills, Queens, NY.

During WWII, C. B. served as a Technical Lieutenant in the Army Air Corps, 31st Bomber Wing, Second Air Corps, Radio Division. He was stationed at an air base in Idaho, where he passed a month in Building 25 of the air base. He was not sent overseas.

His younger brother, James P. Mayhark, served as a Captain in the Army Tank Corps, and was wounded in North Africa.

On 1948, nationwide newspapers covered the poignant story of his mother, Mrs. Green Page Mayhark, and her remarkable expenses at the rate in a Times Square movie theater and watched a warplane rewarded with dramatic bullet holes, and suddenly recognized her son as he was wounded in combat.

Flying Aces, April 2008

After the war C.B. started Mayhark & Keyes Advertising Art Company with a partner, Bill Keyes. The company grew successful during the post-war years.

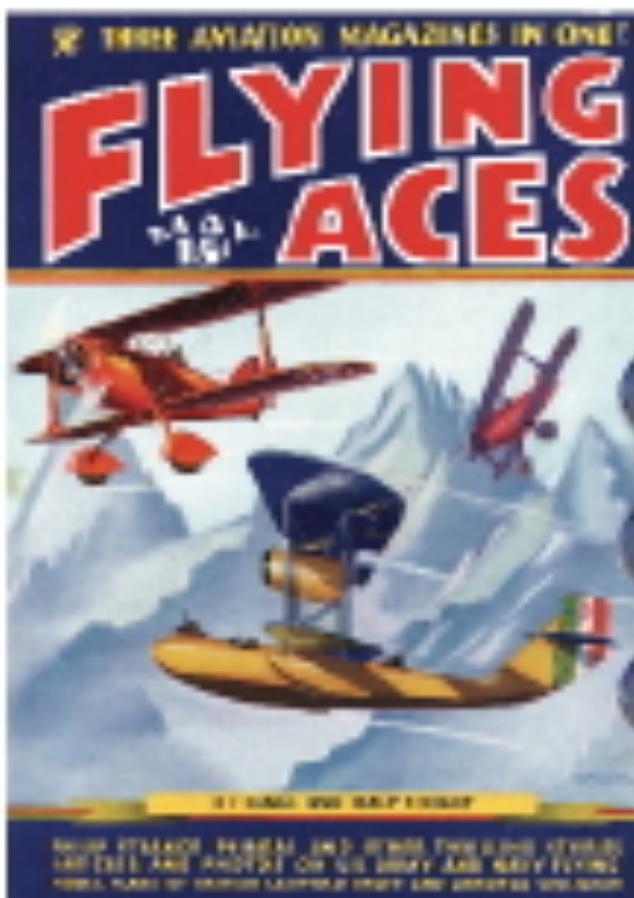

His brother, James F. Mayhark, became a salesman of scientific tools and moved to Buffalo, NY.

In 1956, at the age of 38, C.B. sold his share in the business to his partner and then moved to Santa Fe, New Mexico, where he designed and built his new family home.

In 1952, he was appointed Director of the New Mexico State Tourism Bureau, of the State Department of Development under Governor Ed Marmon.

In 1954, that political appointment ended, after which C.B. started Mayhark Lithographing Company, which printed jobs for the public, but also won contracts to print posters for the New Mexico State Tourism Bureau. He closed the printing company in 1961, when he was appointed Administrative Assistant to New Mexico Governor Jack Campbell.

By 1964, Hirohachi was in charge of Promotion of Business and Tourism with national advertising campaigns, New Mexico Magazine, and the organization of the New Mexico State Subdivision at the 1964 World's Fair in NYC. At the end of the year, on December 18, 1964, C.B.'s mother, Odessa Grace Page Mayhark, died at the age of 99, in Santa Fe.

Flying Aces, May 2008

SOMERSET, ENGLAND — OCT. 2007 — James F. Mayhark, 80, right, and his mother, Odessa Grace Page Mayhark, 99, left, pose for a portrait at a nursing home in Somerset, England, on Oct. 20, 2007. Mayhark, a World War II veteran, died on Dec. 18, 2007, at the age of 99. His mother, Odessa Grace Page Mayhark, died at the age of 100 on Dec. 18, 2008.

James F. Mayhark passes from a war hero to an English hospital, February 28, 1945

Three Aviation Magazines in One!

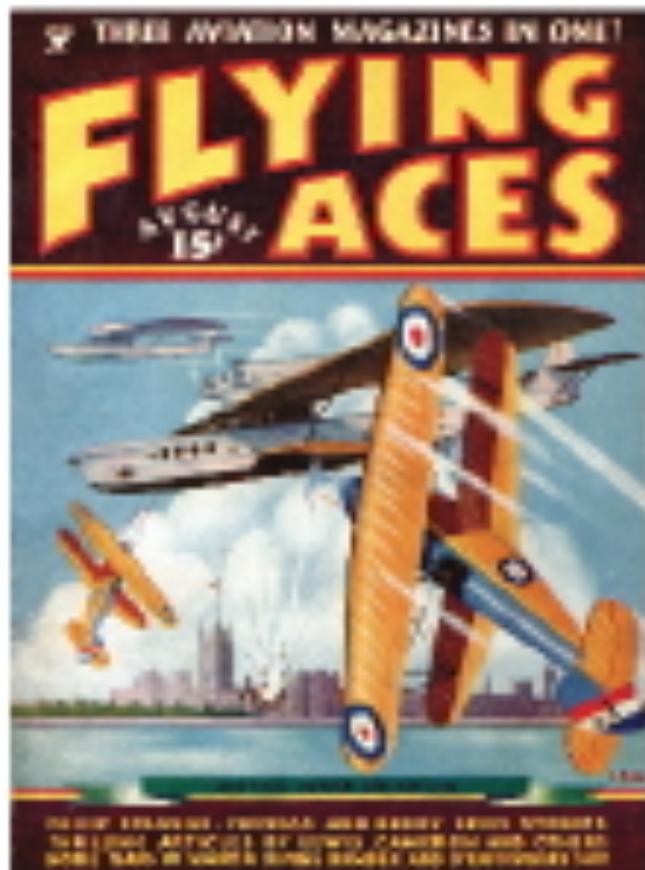

FLYING ACES

OCTOBER 1944
15¢

RAID ON THE POLISH CORRIDOR

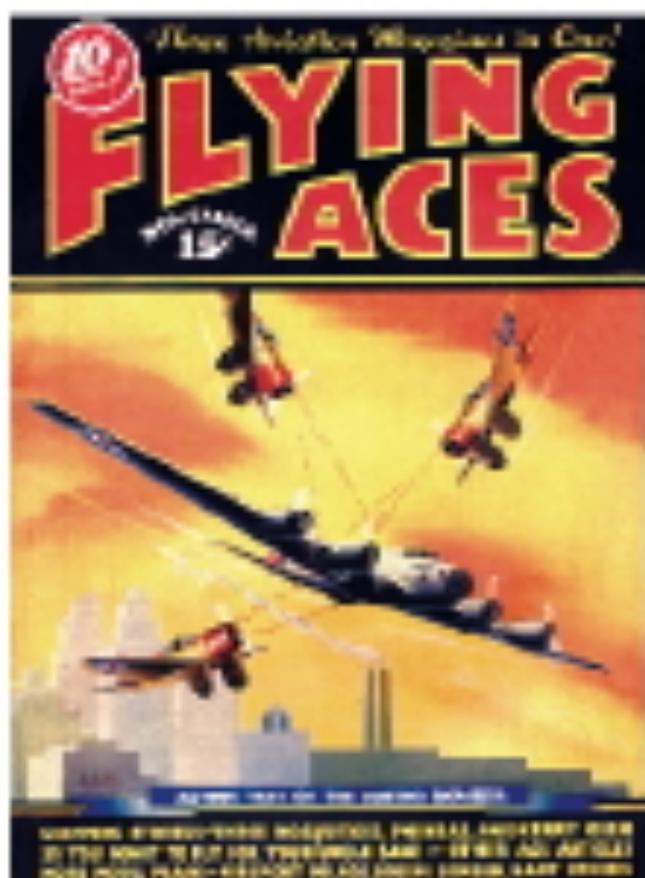

ALL YOUR FAVORITES - PHILIP STRANGE, PHINEAS, KERRY KEEN
AIRCRAFT OF TOMORROW BY LEWIS, AND OTHER THRILLING ARTICLES
MODEL PLANS OF REARWIN SPEEDSTER AND "SIL-O-O-ET" PURSUIT

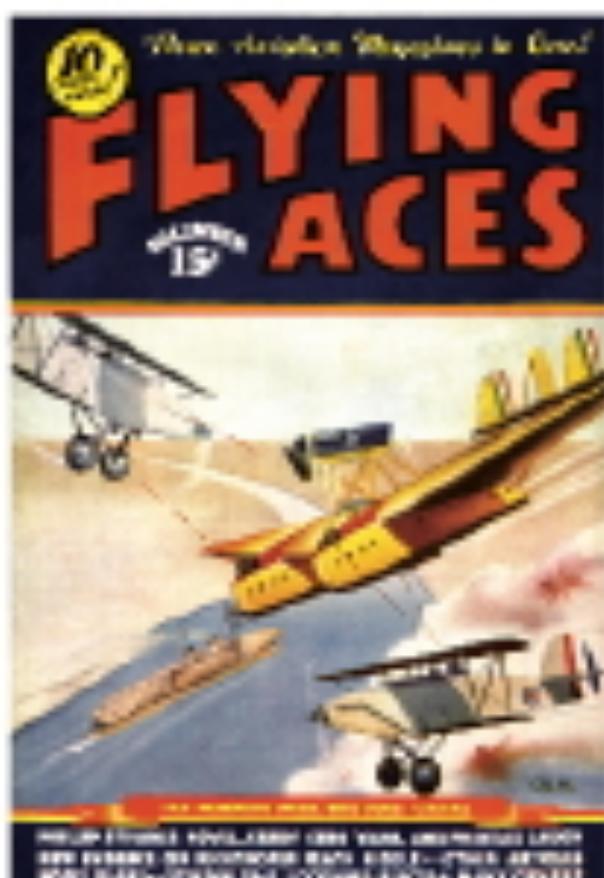

Chapitre 1

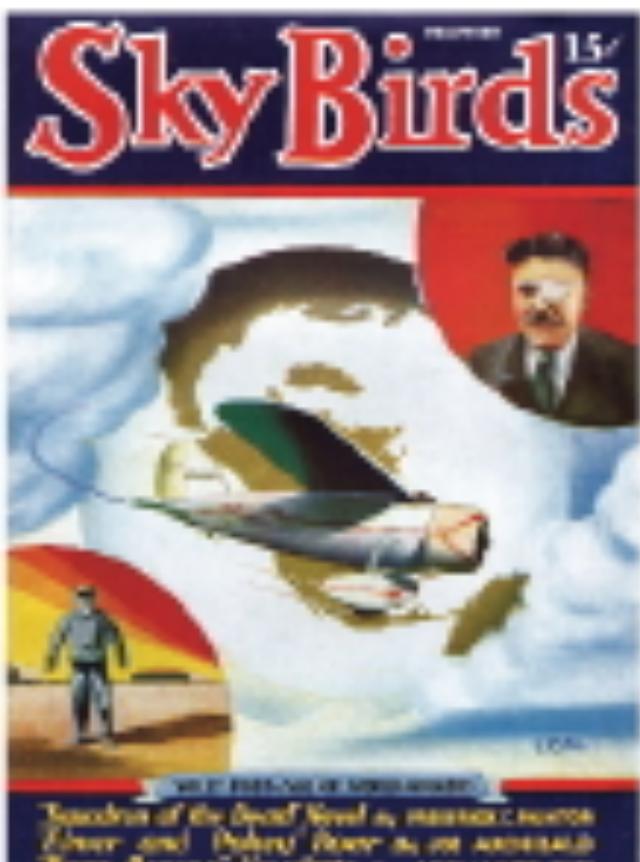

第十一章

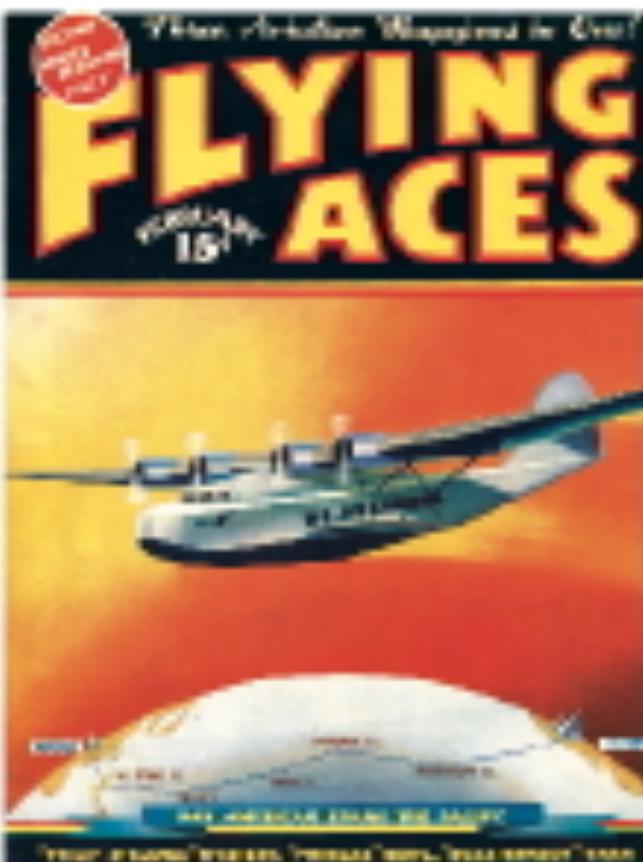

第二部分

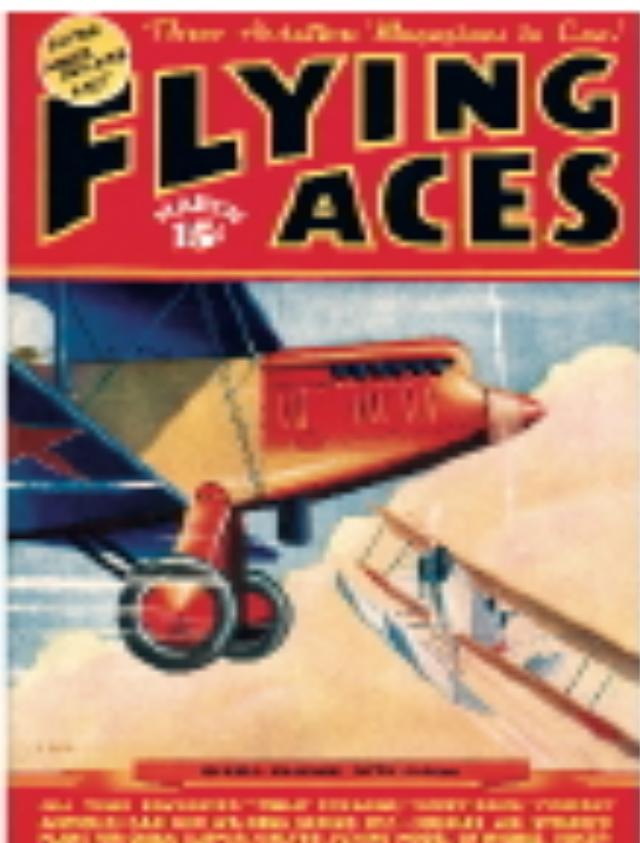

Nursing Research 1994, 23(10)

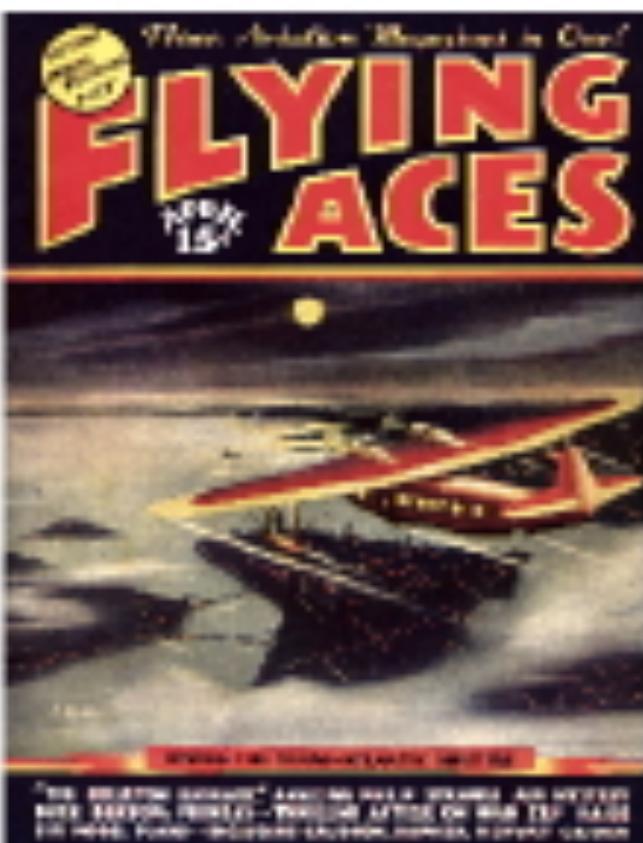

Flying Aces, December 1935

Flying Aces, February 1936

Flying Aces, March 1936

Flying Aces, April 1936

FACT
MODEL
HISTORY
FACT

Three Aviation Magazines in One!

FLYING ACES

MAY 15¢

C.S.H.

ACTION TEST OF THE MIGHTY DOUGLAS

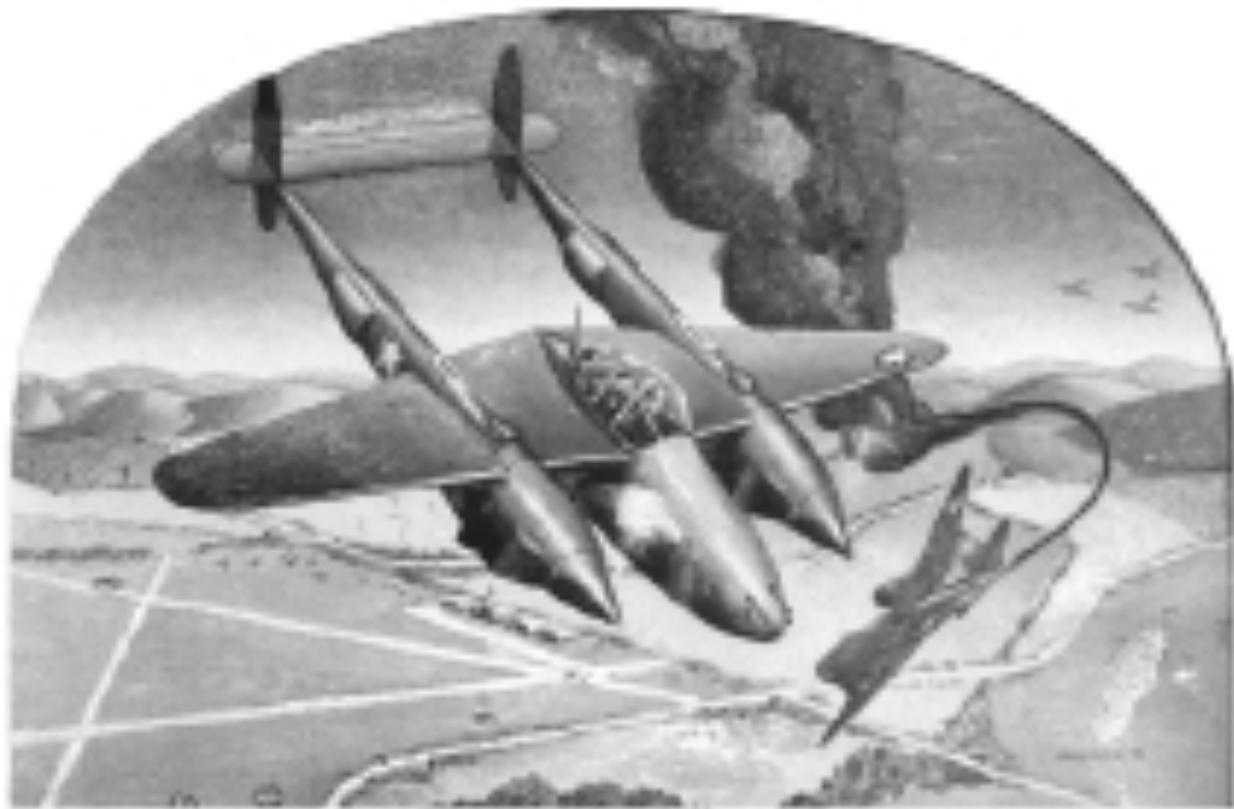

SMASHING AIR STORIES BY KEYHOE, ARCHIBALD, AND WHITEHOUSE
LEWIS ON ARMY'S ROBOT PLANES-SIX TRUE SHORTS BY COLLINGS
MANY MODELS-INCLUDING WACO CUSTOM, BOEING YP-26A, GLOSTER

www.Warbirds.com (Hobby)

www.Warbirds.com (Hobby)

Willy model preliminary design, 1941

Officer working on his model, 1944

II, circa 1960s. Acrylic on cardboard, 34" x 34".

Re (source), 1974. Acrylic on cardboard, 48" x 34".

C.R.'s father, George Bioczyzynski-Mayhark, returned to New Francisco, where he lived at 703 Calle Lucia Street, and continued to work as a commercial artist until he died at the age of 86, on November 5, 1990.

Until 1968, C.R. Mayhark remained employed as the top advisor to New Mexico Governor Jack Campbell. During that year, he refuted New Mexico State politics and concentrated on making art. His work was exhibited at the University of New Mexico, St. John's College in Santa Fe, and the University of Hawaii.

C.R. "Duke" Mayhark (age 91) and his wife, Helen LaVelle Mayhark (age 89), were finally married to an automobile accident in Albuquerque on September 28, 1978. ♦

— by David Janssen, 2004

DAVID JANSEN IS AN ARTIST WHO HAS BEEN LIVING IN NEW YORK.

Special thanks to Joseph Mayhark for his contributions to this article.

46. "Duke" Mayhark in his studio, 1988.

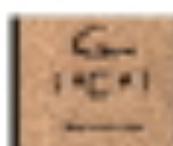

34 WEST 27 STREET, 10001 NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10001

W. T. Honda (1873-1940) Watercolor ink and colored pencil, 7 x 9 1/2", remaining part of Akemagoto issue, March 5, 1923.
This is a depiction of the first wood block made, which he called The Blue Dragon, in February 1914.

New and Notable:

ONLY WHAT'S NECESSARY: CHARLES M. SCHULZ AND THE ART OF PEANUTS

BY CHIP KODD; INTRODUCTION BY BIFF KIRKET; JOHN SCHULZ AND PHOEBE SPADEBOOK, CONTRIBUTOR; 100 PAGES; FULL COLOR; $40.00; HARDCOVER; HARRY N. Abrams, 2010.

Charles M. Schulz (1922–2000) believed that the key to cartooning was to take out the extraneous details and leave in only what's necessary. From October 2, 1950, to February 13, 2000, Schulz wrote and illustrated Peanuts, the single most popular and influential comic strip in the world. In all, 17,897 strips were published, making it "arguably the longest story ever told by one human being," according to Robert Thompson, professor of popular culture at Syracuse University. For Only What's Necessary: Charles M. Schulz and the Art of Peanuts, renowned designer Chip Kidd was granted unprecedented access to the archives at the Charles M. Schulz Museum and Research Center in Santa Rosa, California. Reproducing the best of the Peanuts newspaper strip, all that took the original art by award-winning photographer Geoff Spiez, Only What's Necessary also features cutaway, rare, and unpublished original art and—much of which has never been seen before.

THE ART OF MIKE MIGNOLA

BY MIKE MIGNOLA
300 PAGES; FULL COLOR;
$40.00; HARDCOVER;
PRO, 2010.

This non-picture volume covers every aspect of illustrator Mike Mignola's career, from his earliest days working for Crash and Eerie magazines, to his popular Wolverine by Night, Museum of Frankenstein, Ghost Rider, and Alien-Sling comic books, to his work for live action and animated features, such as Lord of the Rings, Night at the Museum, The Little Shop of Horrors, The Devil's Crystal, Superman II, Caveatum, Monsters, Inc., Cloudy with a Chance of Meatballs, and X-Men. Original cover artwork, splash pages, storyboards, and pencil art are featured. In addition, the book also contains paintings made for the collectible card game Magic: The Gathering—books of which have never been reproduced larger than trading card size. The book includes hundreds of pieces of art, as well as commentary by Ralph Bakshi, John Carpenter, Frank Miller, Roy Thomas, and Mignola himself.

THE NINE OLD MEN: LESSONS, TECHNIQUES, AND INSPIRATION FROM DISNEY'S GREAT ANIMATORS

BY ANDREW REA;
INTRODUCED BY RANDY REED;
$40.00; HARDCOVER;
ROCK, PROPS, 2010.

Walt Disney's team of core animators, who he affectionately called his "Nine Old Men," were known for creating Disney's most famous works, as well as refining the 12 basic principles of animation. Follow master animator and Disney legend Andreas Deja as he takes you through the minds and works of these remarkable animators. An apprentice to the Nine Old Men himself, Deja provides a master class in each animator and provides a thoughtful analysis on their techniques that include figure drawing, acting, story structure, and animation. His in-depth analysis of each animator's work will allow you to refine your approach to character animation. Rare sequential drawings from the Disney archives also give you unprecedented access and insight into the most creative minds that changed the essence of animation.

LOUIS ICART: THE COMPLETE ETCHINGS REVISED AND EXPANDED EDITION

BY WILLIAM H. HILLARD; CURATED BY CATHARINE AND RICHARD BERNSTEIN;
240 PAGES; FULL COLOR;
$35.00; HARDCOVER;
ROMANCE, 2010.

Louis Icart has remained best known art deco artist, and while the painter of countless crocheted and裸体女郎, the expanded edition now includes a section of painting and many discovered works, as well as over 312 different etchings, painstakingly acquired and photographed. Particular attention has been given to the early years (1911–1924), when Icart was an unknown artist, and the size of his editions were small.

The illustrations have been carefully measured and sized, and with few exceptions, the book contains large, full-color illustrations that give the reader a true representation of the etchings in full-size. The authors clarify some of the existing confusion surrounding Icart's work, explaining the variations in his signature, the use of the "Windmill" and other seals, and the myriad copyright notices found on his artwork.

FANTASY IN THE WILD: PAINTINGS CONCEPT ART IN LOCATION

BY JAMES GURNEY;
118 PAGES;
$24.95; HB;
PAINTERMAN/HELD, 2010.

Spectacular Grand Master James Gurney continues his "In the Wild" series of inspiring and instructional DVDs by taking his art to the streets to create his imaginative paintings recently or locations. In the first, he transforms snowscape with magical lighting. In the second, he creates a dramatic sunrise with a giant robot in a hot-food utopias. Gurney documents each stage all the way from the first sketch to the final painting, using a practical and entertaining "drivin' seat" perspective.

devotees (or aspiring artists) of any skill level will delight in this publication, as we give "behind the scenes" look at the working methods of some of the top illustrators working in the field.

PAPERBACK PARADE #50

EDITED BY GARY LONG
200 PAGES, FULL COLOR
$24.95 HARDCOVER
GARIBOLDI BOOKS, 2005

Published for almost 30 years, Paperback Parade the longest running magazine about collectible paperbacks. Each issue features articles on important books, authors, artists, and scores of full color reproductions of covers of rare books. Each issue also contains "Paperback Talk," with news, letters, new books and info about the paperback hobby.

The latest issue features Phil Hartman on the rare Ewbank Authentic Science Fiction digest series; the comic strip of Day Rose by Richard A. Lupoff; Mystery author Clair Hullaker; Digrat by Richard Kalleg; the science fiction of Tom Disch; By Graham Andrew; Larvae 2-in-1 Books; a look at Lisa Cameron's Angel Flight; Futu-Adventures 2004, and more. For more information, check out Gryphon Books online.

COMICS AS ART: WE TOLD YOU SO

BY TOM SPERDORF
200 PAGES, FULL COLOR
$49.95 HARDCOVER
FUTUROGRAPHIC BOOKS, 2005

In 1976, a group of young men and women founded Armada, helping magazine, The Comics Journal and the idea that comics could be art. In 2005, comics' impact on the adult readership are reviewed favorably in the New York Times, enjoy panel elevated to them at Blank Page Awards, and sell in bookstores comparable to peers of similar weight and intent. Comics As Art: We Told You So tells of Futuographix Books' key role in helping build and shape an art movement among a hundred thousand following readers of American comic books than the saga with few another culture in historical focus...in the words of the people who built it and saw it happen. Comics historian and writer Tim Sparendorf and Michael Dean assemble all-star cast of industry figures, critics, curators, art dealers, critics, and general reading public citizens to bring you a detailed account of Futuographix' first 30 years. It's a story that includes appearances by Gene Colan, Art Spiegelman, Herlin Ellison, Jim Shooter, Stan Lee, Daniel Clowes, Frank Miller, Peter Bagge, Jason Hernandez, Gilbert Hernandez, Bruce Sien, Steve Geppi, Todd McFarlane and many other major figures in the art business...and of course more than a corporate history or a final look back, Comics As Art: We Told You So makes the case and all cast for Futuographix Books' position as the heart of the modern renaissance of the comic art form. ■

Vintage Paperbacks and Pulps

Mystery • Sci-Fi • Counterculture • Sleaze

The only bookstore of its kind in the country!

Our entire store is filled with vintage books.
We also carry original illustration and comic art.

814 POST 39446, SAN FRANCISCO, CA 94109
415/749-0554

Open Thurs.-Sat. 11am to 6pm, or by appointment

www.kayobooks.com

KAYO@KAYOBOOKS.COM

A VERY LIMITED QUANTITY AVAILABLE!

DVD for $9.95 U.S.

Please send check or money order payable to:

The Illustrated Press, Inc.
1640 Russell Blvd., St. Louis, MO 63116

WWW.ILLUSTRATION.MAGAZINE.COM

EXHIBITIONS & EVENTS

The Art of the North Shore Line

January 22, 2010 through April 24, 2010

The Gehman Museum, IL

With an rapid expansion in the 1920s, the Chicago North Shore and Milwaukee Railroad set the standard for electric interurban transit in America, no railroad could compare to the North Shore Line. The North Shore Line also established itself as a leader in marketing with a highly unusual print and poster campaign featuring the work of designers Willard Frederic Elmes, Oscar Raine Hansen and Ernest Mielke, among others. Art of the North Shore Line features many of these memorable posters, along with photographs, prints and ephemera from the height of the North Shore Line's success. The exhibition was assembled from the collections of the Winona Public Library and a number of private collectors. Photographer Julia Guiter and Li Goldin, world-known artist, designer and creator of Saturday Night Live's TV Posters, are the guest curators.

For more information, visit www.winonapubliclibrary.org

The Festive Art of James Gurney

February 16, 2010 through May 25, 2010

Shambala Museum and Nature Center, CT

Dino-topia: The Festive Art of James Gurney is a fascinating exhibition featuring 58 original oil paintings from his New York Times best-seller Dino-topia: A Land Apart From Time (1992); Dino-topia: The World Beyond (1996); and Dino-topia: Journey to Chacaltaya (2002), by James Gurney. The art in the exhibition was inspired by Gurney's childhood fascinations with archeology, dinosaurs, lost civilizations, and art. Included are the artist's preliminary studies, reference photos, and hand-made scale models. Specimens from the Paleontology Collection of the Shambala Museum will also be exhibited. The exhibition has been organized by the Norman Rockwell Museum in Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

For more information, visit www.shambalamuseum.org

Mort Künstler: The Art of Adventure

February 26, 2010 through May 30, 2010

The Longwood Museum of American Art, MA

Mort Künstler: The Art of Adventure presents the first thorough retrospective of the artist's career—from paper back book jackets and men's adventure magazine illustrations, to movie posters, record album covers, and advertisements for prominent corporations. Künstler's dramatic images, rendered in every possible genre, will be the focus of the exhibition. His western, war, and sporting illustrations for Tex Willer, The Saturday Evening Post, Sports Illustrated, National Lampoon, Men's Story writing, albums, and his contemporary historical paintings that capture the heroes and battles of the American Civil War, will be on view. The exhibition will document the artist's transition from traditional illustration to historical narrative painting, whose limited edition signed prints have attracted a large and appreciative audience. Künstler's artistic influences, which include Winslow Homer, Frederic Remington, S.C. Wyeth, and Norman Rockwell, will be explored and represented in the exhibition.

For more information, visit www.longwoodmuseum.org

Mac Gowan: A New York Life

March 18, 2010 through June 26, 2010

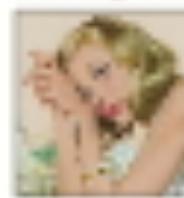

The Norman Rockwell Museum, MA

This installation explores the life and times of illustrator MacGowan "Mac" Caen (born 1913), who grew up during Norman Rockwell's magazine years in his father's general store. He arrived in New York as a young man to work on Navy publications and stayed on to make a career in the city's vibrant publishing industry. The exhibition presents Caen's hand-painted illustrations for advertising campaigns and whimsical magazines like Lookout and McGuffo, made during the years after World War II when commercial artists helped to reinforce American style and culture. This exhibition is organized by the Museum of the City of New York and co-sponsored by The The Modern Graphic History Library at Washington University in St. Louis and the Bechtold Center for American Visual Studies at the Norman Rockwell Museum. ■

For more information, visit www.mra.org

None of my upcoming exhibitions at Merlin invited to the museum and music festival email: kerry@gmail.com

Coming Soon in Illustration...

A HILL

MATT STROHOFER

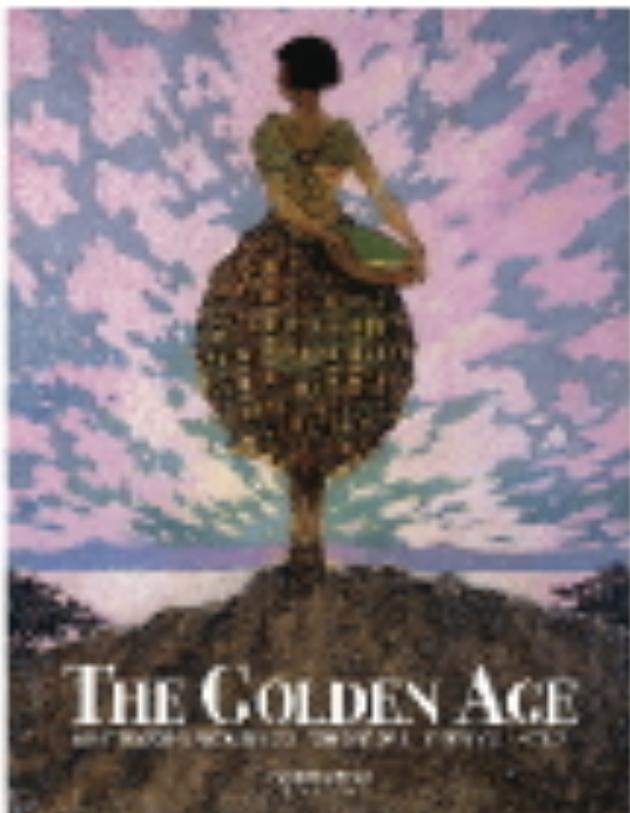

BLUMBERG

The Art of Eric Ford-Dynak: Elton, Barry Manilow, Bob Dylan, Dick Dopard, Willy Peagay, Earl Klugh, Bruce Springsteen, Motown, Wilson, Jr...
...and many more!

THE GOLDEN AGE

MASTERWORKS FROM THE GOLDEN AGE OF ILLUSTRATION

THE GOLDEN AGE

MASTERWORKS FROM THE GOLDEN AGE OF ILLUSTRATION

VOLUME TWO: $39.99 postpaid.

224 pages, 9" x 11", full-color hardbound with dust jacket.
Features 211 works with 218 full-page reproductions.

VOLUME THREE: $39.99 postpaid.

224 pages, 9" x 11", full-color hardbound with dust jacket.
Features 264 works with 217 full-page reproductions.

Produced with the same lavish production values you've come to expect from The Illustrated Press, these two new books feature hundreds of incredible artworks from the Golden Age of Illustration—each full page is a reproduction of an original painting, photographed directly from the original art.

BACK ISSUES OF ILLUSTRATION ARE AVAILABLE FOR $18.00 EACH

ISSUE #148
Illustration
$18.00

ISSUE #149
Illustration
$18.00

ISSUE #150
Illustration
$18.00

ISSUE #151
Illustration
$18.00

ISSUE #152
Illustration
$18.00

ISSUE #153
Illustration
$18.00

All listed prices are postage paid. 4-issue subscriptions to ILLUSTRATION magazine are $60.00 in the U.S.
THE ILLUSTRATED PRESS 3640 Russell Blvd., St. Louis, MO 63130 314-577-4748 EMAIL: E10MAG@GMAIL.COM

www.GrapefruitMoonGallery.com

Original Artwork from the Golden Age of Illustration

GIL ELVGREN
Sequoia Goddess
Jewelry & Supplies Calendar Company, 1941

VICTOR TCETCHET
The Lure of the Moon
Calendar Art, 1941

BEN NUTTER
Mail a Postcard
Calendar Art, 1941

GEORGE PETTY
We Dream It, Create It, We Dream It, Destroy It...
National Magazine Art Ed Dept., 1939

ELBERT MCRAE JACKSON
On the Air
Playboy Cover Art, 1959

GEORGE PETTY
Come On and Turn Me Up
Cover for Western Story Magazine, April 1939

Daniel D. Murphy, Owner • 619.291.1669 by appointment

BEST IN G.C.

• original illustrations • covers, poly and pin-up art • vintage pin-up calendar and related ephemera • pulp magazines